“When you play, play hard.” - Theodore Roosevelt
The final votes are about to be cast and tensions are running high. One last push on the campaign trail and we settle in for the wait. It’s been a long and bitter campaign, but now we’re finally seeing the end. Friendships have formed, and enemies have been made. We just need to keep this together for a few more hours and then maybe, just maybe, we’ll find out if all the sacrifices have been worth it.

For some this is a night for celebration. For others this is a night for bitterness and grief. For others, still, it’s a night suitable to settle a score or two. And for the professionals it’s just business as usual.
