ADVENTURE SUMMARY

The operators are already on their way to Centralia, PA, where a coal mine that caught fire over a century and a half ago has finally died down. Forsyte Technologies© recently lost an incredibly important research subject from one of their labs on the outskirts of the metropolis—a hyper-drake named Skrygrard—and its tracking signature goes dark near one of the entrances into the subterranean network of passages. Coming back with the specimen alive means a lucrative 10,000 bytecoins, but reduced compensation beats dying in a soot-choked tunnel.

PREGENERATED CHARACTERS

At the end of Specimens in Centralia there are four pre-generated characters made using the Hyper Score rules fully detailed in Hypercorps 2099, as well as a brief primer with explanations for some hyper abilities. Everything a player needs in order to use Cripple Beast, Improv, Nightmare Fist, or Warp is provided, and it is recommended for players new to Hypercorps 2099 to utilize these pregenerated characters to familiarize themselves with the rules and setting.
Attempts to overtake the automobile (leaping onto it and trying to force Bill out) and fight savagely until seven of them are killed, at which point the last surviving ganger flees back down the roadway (if there’s a bike intact) or into the woods (which is densely grown enough that it qualifies as difficult terrain).

Note that if the final ganger gets away there are consequences for the operators’ trip home (see pages 7–8). Fortunately their motorcycles are old school and can quickly be appropriated if the party find themselves undertaking a highway chase after a lingering enemy.

Rummaging through the dead biker’s belongings, the PCs find some banged up (but functional) revolvers, a number of flasks of booze, and leather armor. Any operator that makes a DC 17 Search check finds that one of the corpses has some chrome (a pair of hydraulic springheels). A DC 14 Heal check successfully removes the bodytech, allowing for it to be re-installed on someone else. As it happens Bill knows an old retired veterinarian-turned-bodytech surgeon that lives out this way; if the armored van was significantly damaged (taking more than 50 points of damage) he strongly urges the party to go visit his friend anyway so he has time to make repairs to the vehicle.

“Doc” (who insists on only being called that and that alone) lives entirely off-the-grid, way out in the cut, in a miniscule patch of forest between hypercorporate farms. She’s an old dwarven combat medic that took to animal care after being deemed unfit for service from injuries and has been a proponent of bodytech since its start. An old hand when it comes to surgery, Doc has a +13 skill bonus to the DC 18 Heal check to install the springheels in a PC. Thanks to some nanite recovery spray the technology can be fully integrated and working by morning. So long as the party is polite, she doesn’t charge anything for the service (though if they are rude, it’s a 500bt procedure whether or not it is successful).
HYDRAULIC SPRINGHEELS

Price 8,000 gp per pair; Slot feet; Weight 8 lbs.; Install DC 18

These surprisingly non-invasive implants go into a creature’s feet, integrating themselves into their heels. Biosteel nanites quickly fix to bone, muscles, and tendons, supporting a miniature hydraulic cylinder that rapidly extends outward for faster movement and enhanced jumps. Creatures with hydraulic springheels increase their base land speed by 5 ft. and gain a +10 circumstance bonus when making an Acrobatics or Athletics check to jump.

A creature with more than two feet must have a hydraulic springheel in each foot to receive any bonuses.
Whether or not the PCs stop to see Doc and fix the van or keep on driving to the Centralia Mines, the drastic change in the tone and breadth of the landscape is noticeable both day and night. Read the following when they approach the last known location of their target:

Several century-old signs pock the side of the road and though most of them are faded beyond legibility, you make out enough of it to recognize that this is Centralia and that visitors are not welcome here. That's fitting given that the place looks like a desolate wasteland—the densely packed trees thin out considerably here and trails of smoke rise up out of the very ground.

The operators’ intel leads to an unobscured entrance to the mines and a DC 13 Survival check reveals that the surrounding area has been cleared only recently. A result of 20 or more recognizes that the clearing was done by a Large-sized, clawed creature within the last four days. Most of the mining tunnels are 15-20 feet wide and the specimen (a hyper-drake named Skrygrard) is indeed within; shortly before the operators’ arrival, she managed to cave in the passages leading deeper into the complex and has been planning her next move since then.

Even the area outside the mine smells of burnt coal and its soot-covered confines are even worse. Everything within is coated in a fine black powder piled so high at certain points that it obscures the tracks once used for mining carts. Dozens if not hundreds of sets of foot, claw, and hoof prints run through the soot in all directions—trying to find your mystery target isn’t going to be easy.

Still warm to the touch, the Centralia Mines are a haven for creatures fond of heat, fire and ash; every 3d10 minutes the PCs have a 25% chance to run into them. None of these creatures have ever met humanoids before and combat isn’t the only possible outcome to these encounters; their initial dispositions are included in the table below (provided the party can communicate with the creature in question).

There are only two regular flame drakes: Skryrgrard’s (rapidly grown) children, the reason she fled from the Forsyte Technologies© research facility. When encountered they attempt to lure the operators closer to their mother and sibling, leading to working the party into a flank. The hyper-drake hides in the far southeastern chamber on the map until the PCs have spent some time exploring the complex.

After being in the mine for half an hour the PCs are noticed by their quarry; for every ten minutes the operators spend in the Centralia Mine they receive an Awareness check (DC 30 –5 per previous check) to overhear Skrygrard stalking them. When the hyper-drake realizes she is discovered she unleashes one fireball breath to discourage the operators from engaging her, then telepathically commands them to flee. Any encounters with her afterward are aggressive to the extreme as Skrygrard fights to the death to defend her young—if either of her children is killed, she pursues the party outside regardless of the danger they pose. Otherwise the hyper-drake responds to any battle that breaks out with her children on the 2nd round of combat, blasting the area with flames and demanding the operators leave (the other sibling arrives at the end of the 5th round of combat).
TRUSSES AND TUNNELS

Throughout the Centralia Mines are timbers implanted to hold up the tunnels when they were first excavated over a century and a half ago. The fire that raged in the complex for so long (how exactly it came to an end is at the GM’s discretion and a hook for future plots!) didn’t reach this section and the wood is intact, though blackened and brittle. Depending on how the operation is going, the PCs may have good reason to make a hasty retreat or cut off the escape of an enemy—a DC 10 Knowledge (engineering) check reveals that destroying a truss will do exactly that.

Trusses in the Centralia Mine have hardness 4 and only 10 hit points, and are always paired with one on each side of the tunnel. If one is destroyed, the tunnel will visibly shift, creating difficult terrain in all squares within a 15-ft. radius. If this area overlaps that of any other destroyed truss (such as if the trusses on both sides of a tunnel are destroyed), the entire area affected by both trusses immediately caves in. Creatures caught in the rockslide take 3d6 points of bludgeoning damage and are buried, unable to move until freed with a DC 14 Strength check or DC 17 Escape Artist check. A DC 15 Reflex save halves the damage and avoids being buried. The affected squares become impassable except to creatures with a burrow speed, earth glide, or other similar ability that allows movement through solid objects.

CHAPTER 3: DON’T MAKE ME TURN THIS CAR AROUND

When the PCs have achieved their objective (by incapacitating or killing Skrygrard) there’s nothing left to be done but get back to Pittsburgh and get paid—but just like everything else in an operator’s life, that’s easier said than done.

First of all there’s the matter of fitting everything into the van. With Bill in the driver’s seat and one operator riding shotgun, the PCs and hyper-drake can fit in the back. If her offspring are dead they can be slung on either side of the vehicle with ropes (which Bill has plenty of—he says not to ask why) but only one living drake can be fitted onto the top of the armored van. He also has a large tarp, though it requires a DC 20 Disguise check to sufficiently conceal a creature as large as the drake bound to the outside of the vehicle (and even then, there is only one tarp), so the comings-and-goings of the PCs are likely to raise eyebrows (and may impact how profitable the operation ultimately is). Depending on their path back, the party may also have more trouble to contend with.

Taking the direct route back to Pittsburgh is roughly a 6 hour trip but requires passing again through Giganot territory. Circumnavigating it guarantees no further Giganot trouble, but takes an additional 14 hours of driving.

If the party travels through Giganot territory they’ll have to pass through the debris field once more. If one or more Giganot survived the initial encounter they’ll have returned with reinforcements, attempting another similar ambush at the same spot. If none of the Giganotz escaped the ride will be bumpy, but safe.
If the party is bringing back live specimens they awaken 1d4 hours into the trip. Skrygrard’s children react instinctively (exactly how is at the GM’s discretion) the hyper-drake quietly heals herself using her hyper abilities before pleading with the party, begging to be let free. A DC 20 Bluff check convinces her that her ultimate destination isn’t back at the lab, but otherwise she unleashes a fireball breath that hits the maximum number of operators (then tries to break her bonds, assuming she has been tied up).

GETTING PAID

Read the following when the operators get back to the Steel City:

The sun has already set as you near the Steel City and Pittsburgh lights up the twilight sky like a budding silver planting, its mega towers like pistils stretching upward towards the moon. Taking the outer expressway into 79, Bill quickly drives the armored van over to a huge swathe of nondescript warehouses, taking the exit marked “Strip District”. After navigating the complex for a few minutes he pulls the vehicle into the opening doors of a ramshackle building, coming to a stop with a small sigh of relief.

The drop-off point is in Pittsburgh’s Strip District, a swathe of largely nondescript warehouses. If the PCs have Skrygrard alive and she is awake when they arrive, the hyper-drake immediately realizes what is going on, makes one more impassioned plea to be let go, then attacks.

Ms. Grey’s limousine pulls into the building 1d4+3 minutes after the party arrives, immediately followed by a military cargo truck and tough-looking security detail (a total of six heavily armed and armored professionals—a clearly superior force). Depending on what happened during the operation, the PCs may make more or less than the original payment.

In the event that Skrygrard is dead the operators need to make a DC 22 Diplomacy check to get paid anything at all (half what they would have received otherwise). Each PC may make a check but Ms. Grey doesn’t tolerate it long enough for everyone to take a turn; how long exactly depends on the previous checks. The worse the failure, the more likely Ms. Grey and her armed retinue leave (and on a roll of natural 1, they leave immediately).

- Base Save +3

Special Inside the armored van, the crew has cover, granting a +4 bonus to AC and a +2 bonus on Reflex saves.

OFFENSE

- Maximum Speed 150 ft.; Acceleration 30 ft.
- Weapons varies (Bill’s are waiting to be re-installed)
- Attack ram 6d8
- CMB +8; CMD 18

STATISTICS

An armored van requires 5bt of fuel for every ten minutes of operation (30 for every hour of operation).

Shooting at one of the vehicle’s tires requires an attack against AC 18 (+ the operator’s Vehicular Control bonus); armored van tires have hardness 5 and 10 hp.

- Propulsion alchemical (2 squares of diesel engines under the van’s hood; hardness 8; hp 60)
- Driving Check Pilot DC 5
- Forward Facing from the driver’s seat (bulletproof glass, hardness 8, hp 20)
- Driving Device steering wheel and neural jack (+5 competence bonus to driving checks)
- Driving Space a single 5-foot-by-5-foot square on the left side of the vehicle behind its hood
- Crew 1
- Decks 1

- CMB +0; CMD 10

DESCRIPTION

A motorcycle has one leading wheel connected to a steering column with handlebars. It’s powered by an engine geared into a back drive wheel that propels the vehicle forward. A motorcycle requires 2bt of fuel for every ten minutes of operation (12 for every hour of operation). The vehicle is too small to grant cover—its driver is completely exposed while operating it, though they enjoy total visibility.

Shooting at one of the vehicle’s tires requires an attack against AC 18 (+ the operator’s Vehicular Control bonus); motorcycle tires have hardness 2 and 7 hp.

- Propulsion alchemical (½ square of gasoline engine; hardness 4, hp 12)
- Forward Facing away from the back wheel
- Driving Device steering handlebars
- Driving Space immediately on the single seat
- Crew —
- Passengers — (one, but with a –5 penalty to Vehicular Control checks)

TACTICS
Before Combat Bill works extremely hard to avoid direct confrontation and takes the path of least resistance (literally in the case of driving) at the first opportunity.
During Combat In addition to swearing like a drunken sailor every time someone damages “Bev” (his armored van), Bill drives as defensively as he can and only resorts to ramming into something when there is no other option. He leaves the fighting to his passengers and unless conditions are strongly in his favor (or he receives a great deal of additional compensation for endangering himself and his ride), drives toward safety.
Morale Bill flees as soon as possible so long as Bev is still running. Anyone who disables the vehicle earns his enmity and he furiously fights them to the death.

Bill is a secretive and swarthy driver with a penchant for beer as prominent and overbearing as his independent streak. A local from Pittsburgh and the son of a truck driver (who himself was the son of a truck driver), after his semi-truck had its contents pilfered beneath his notice Bill lost his job at Uplyft and without a dependable backup plan, quickly fell to crime. Investing every bytecoin he had into “Bev”, his Fujitsaka Armored Transport Van, the swarthy drunk has become something of a local celebrity in the Steel City (whom is of course wanted by the police). The vehicle is in a constant state of disrepair and after a particularly close call during a bank robbery in Altoona, he has always put as much of his resources as possible into maintaining its plating, structure, and engine.
The garish patches and bloody smears on the worn leather vest of this lithe mutant draw little attention away from the unnatural greenish cast to its skin or the bulging tumors that play across its body.

Sam Jones was utterly disinterested in scholastic pursuits and quickly flunked out of school, living on the streets not long after and finding that the only joy in his life came from fighting. Working his way up betting pits, he managed to score a gig as a low-rent murderball player in Toronto and managed to keep it for a few months. While playing a seasonal match against the LA Destroyers he reached a breaking point, however, and Sam’s adrenal gland kicked in hardcore; in a matter of moments he not only permanently paralyzed several members of the opposing team, but killed one of his teammates as well. The unprecedented occurrence (both his transformation and the death of a player on the same team) triggered an impulse for flight as the incident garnered more and more investigation, and “Cripple Beast” (as the media calls him) has clandestinely traveled to Pittsburgh to stay off the radar (and make some scratch on the side).

CHARACTER NOTES
Jasmine Madrius tried to live inside of the system—after several scholarship for gymnastics, technical design, and voluntary service to Yale Incorporated, she was paying back her loans a month at time while supporting a family of five. It was horrible luck that her wife and children were visiting on the day that a team of operators broke into her office, holding a visiting Peretta Arms hyperexec hostage. The sec-ops teams that came in laid waste to anyone not registered with her company—including her family. Scarred both physically and mentally, Jasmine no wages a one-woman war against the hypercorporations that tore her life away from her (Peretta Arms especially) under the guise of Improv.

Molecular Whip: A molecular whip operates as a whip, with the following changes: a molecular whip deals 1d10 slashing damage (Medium-sized) with a critical range of 18–20/x3 and cannot deal nonlethal damage. If the wielder is proficient with a whip, the first attack they make in a turn against a target is made against the target’s touch AC (subsequent attacks against the same target that turn use the target’s normal AC).

On an attack roll of a natural 1, a wielder of a molecular whip may accidentally hit themselves, making a second attack roll that targets the wielder’s AC. Upon successfully hitting themselves, there is a 25% chance the wielder cuts off a finger, ear, or other part of their body (at the GM’s discretion, though this should rarely involve losing an entire limb). A molecular whip wielder cannot critically hit themselves, and instead add +15% to the chance that they suffer dismemberment should they confirm a self-inflicted critical threat.

When a molecular whip deals massive damage (in excess of 50 hit points or more) it is considered to have the vorpal weapon property as an extraordinary effect. Molecular whips deal double damage against structures and unattended objects.

CHARACTER NOTES
Harvey Lovecraft always knew his position as a security guard was, well, secure. With enough shares to qualify for the board of trustees in Ventell Incorporated (a firm specializing in holding assets for hypercorporations at low cost) there was no chance that the simple nightstick job was going to get replaced by a robot, which was how he liked it—nothing lasts forever though and eventually Harvey’s luck got the better of him. One night on the beat he ran into some operators, causing them to botch their job and release a bioweapon that killed nearly everyone within a mile radius. Only Harvey survived, transformed into a freakish monster and denied the life of relative leisure he once knew. Now he wanders the subterranean underworld of Pittsburgh in search of meaning and purpose (often butting heads with hypercorporations, still blaming them for his misfortune).

Adrienne Cobol was and still is one of the underdog up-and-coming lawyers at the firm of Gendrich & Walsh, located in pristine downtown Pittsburgh—even after the incident. While looking into the scientific details of a particular case Adrienne watched an assassin’s bullet pierce its target, a man sitting across from her, the lead shattering a flask of something anathema to humans and, so it seemed, instantly killing the young woman. She woke up hours later in the morgue, her identity as a half-elf revealed. However, no tests were taken that determined that she had changed and since then, Adrienne has taken to operating under the moniker of “Warp”—and hasn’t lost a case.

CHARACTER NOTES
With the bent in the mechanics for more damage—be it through hyper powers, spells, or even just Hyper Strength—hero points (introduced in the Pathfinder Roleplaying Game: Advanced Player’s Guide) are inherent to a game of Hypercorps 2099.

As a result you’ll find several hyper abilities that make characters more durable, but there’s another aspect to this: how hero points are used and what they can do.

At hyper score 1, hyper characters gain 1 hero point. At hyper score 4, 7, and 10 they increase their maximum hero points by 1 (up to a maximum pool of 4 hero points). NPCs do not gain hero points.

Operators can recover spent hero points by completing an operation (whether they get paid or walk away) or whenever they increase their hyper score.

A hero point in Hypercorps 2099 can be used only in the following ways:

Cheat Death and Inspiration operate as they normally do, though cheat death only costs one hero point.

Hyper Success: You may spend a hero point instead of making a single attack roll, combat maneuver check, saving throw, or skill check to automatically succeed that check, regardless of the difficulty of the task. Attack rolls made in this way are always considered critical threats, but reduce the weapon’s critical multiplier to x2 for this attack. This decision must be made before the dice are rolled.

Hyper Save: You may spend a hero point as a free action on your turn to make another saving throw against a persistent effect (such as fear, paralysis, sickened, or nauseated).

When a hyper character would be killed for any reason, they are instead at death’s door. While at death’s door, a hyper character can be healed normally and if the healing would bring them back to 0 hp or above, they are restored to life with no penalties. A hyper character can remain at death’s door a number of rounds per day equal to their hyper score or their Constitution modifier, whichever is higher. In addition, hyper characters add their hyper score to Constitution saving throws to avoid death.

Cinematic Crescendo: Far and away the most powerful way to spend hero points in Hypercorps 2099, you may spend a hero point to take control of a scene for a brief moment. By giving a vivid, entertaining, and gripping explanation of what happens during your turn, you may (instead of taking normal actions for the round) take up to twice the normal number of actions you can normally perform in a single turn, while using one feat you lack the requirements for, and at the discretion of the GM and remainder of the group, any of the above uses for hero points as well. Cinematic crescendo can never be used by one PC against another PC, or against a Mr. Gray or Ms. Grey.

For example, Kahraze (human monk 4 [hs 1, meganaut 1]) is facing three different gangers rushing down an alleyway 10 feet across, each of them 10 feet from him and each other. Chris, Kahraze’s player, spends a hero point and says, “Kahraze grins and yells, ‘I love pinball!’ and runs up against the wall, slamming into each of them with kicks and using his great jumping skills to carry from one to the next, landing with a flip behind the last of them.” The group and GM agree that’s not terribly out of the realm of possibility (Kahraze has Lunge and nearly all the feat prerequisites for Whirlwind Attack), and Chris rolls the damage for three attacks, one against each ganger, placing his character at the other end of the alleyway.

On a better day in another dimension, Chris instead says, “Kahraze reaches into his inner focus and in-depth study of hundreds of Shaw Brothers kung fu films, leaping onto the wall and running a few feet before spinning-kicking the first ganger in the face, jumping from that guy’s shoulder and flipping into an axe-kick that slams the skull of the next assailant, then uses both feet to kick off the second target’s back while hooking his arms around the neck of his last foe, pulling the guy back and down into the ground to snap his enemy’s neck.” Stunned, the GM drops his soda as the table claps wildly—Kahraze’s first two attacks grant free uses of stunning fists (with normal damage and still requiring Fortitude saves), a free combat maneuver check to bull rush the 2nd target backwards, and an automatic trip and critical hit on the third ganger. Kahraze is prone at the end of the alleyway by the end of his action, but Chris figures it was worth it.
MYTHIC MANIA!
