IN THE 41ST MILLENNIUM
Battles for impact! Here comes Battlefleet Gothic! The brand new game of spaceship battles is creating disturbances throughout the sector at Games Workshop HQ. All of us crazed gamers in the Promotions Department had a rather large-scale test battle before the game hit the shelves, and it was one wild time. (Read all about it later in this issue.) We hope everybody got an opportunity to take part in the nationwide Battlefleet Gothic Demo Day at your local Games Workshop Hobby Center or Rogue Trader store. From what we’ve heard, it was a smashing success. If you’ve any tales of glory (or woe) to tell, drop us a line. We’re sure you’ve already logged plenty of time gaming your own interstellar slugfests with your mighty fleets.

Even with all the buzz surrounding Battlefleet Gothic, we are now focused straight on the main event of the year. If you didn’t know (and shame on you for not knowing), Games Day 1999 is flying straight at you in a matter of weeks! Before you know it, this whirlwind of gaming lunacy will touch down in Baltimore on July 9th and 10th. Get yourself prepared by taking a good look at the massive Games Day blowout later in this issue. It contains everything you need to know about getting tickets, signing up for games, and entering the legendary Golden Demon Painting Competition.

Between Battlefleet Gothic and Games Day, we’ve had just enough time to make sure all the bits are in order for our Grand Tournaments. The first one took place in Baltimore, March 12th-14th. We’ll have the full dirt on these marquee gaming events in a future issue of White Dwarf, so be on the lookout! That’s about it (whew) from here, so get rending and lock on to all the Battlefleet Gothic goodies in store for you this month! Damn the torpedoes, fire the Nova Cannon...

EXPAND THE FLEET

Battlefleet Gothic grows this month with a slew of new releases. All manner of ships are coming to both the Imperial and Chaos fleets in an effort to claim galactic supremacy.

The Imperial fleet gets even more immense with the addition of more ships in the form of the Imperial Emperor Class Battleship, Sword Class Frigates, and the Imperial Cruisers box. The Emperor Class Battleship flies as the flagship of your Imperial fleet and packs some of the most explosive firepower on any ship you'll encounter. The Sword Class Frigates serve as escort ships to the battleships and make excellent support for your fleet. With the Imperial Cruisers box set you can reinforce your fleet and assemble your ships to represent any of the numerous classes of cruisers with the variety of weapons included.

The Chaos Despoiler Class Battleship is one of the most powerful Chaos vessels in the universe. Packed to the gills with offensive strength, it is almost without equal in regards to its destructive capability. The Infidel Class Raiders are based on plans lost by the Imperium and used by Chaos to build a large escort ship. They are flown in great numbers in Chaos fleets and can take on their fair share of enemy ships on their own. The Chaos Cruisers boxed set allows you to create any class of cruiser that your horrible legions deem necessary.

THE DARK ANGELS COMETH

This month sees the coming of a grim light over the horizon as the Dark Angels receive the official Codex treatment. The history of these most mysterious agents of the Emperor shrouds a myriad of grim secrets that have haunted them all since their Chapter’s inception. Inside the pages of Codex: Dark Angels you’ll find clues to figuring out the true mission of the Dark Angels, as well as the complete army list with special characters, and a hobby section on collecting, painting, and playing with the sinister Angels of Death.

SPACE MARINES DIVERSIFIED

A whole batch of Space Marine releases this month will give you the opportunity to customize the armament of any of your squads. The Space Marines with Assault Weapons come with either a Plasma Gun or a Melta Gun to bulk up your tactical squads, while the Space Marine Devastators are now available separately to give you the freedom to build Devastator squads with however many of each weapon you choose. You can pick up a Devastator with either a Heavy Bolter, Plasma Cannon, or Lascannon.

The single Devastators (drawn above, with Plasma Cannon) and the Space Marines with Assault Weapons (right, with Plasma Gun) allow you to equip your Space Marine squads to your own preference.

THE SPREAD OF CHAOS

Chaos grows ever stronger as each day goes by. This month they find leadership from the Chaos Space Marine Lord and increased mobility in the form of the Chaos Space Marine Rhino. The Chaos Lord is an incredible model showing how awe inspiring the forces of Chaos can truly be, while the Rhino is an evil Chaotic form of the standard transport for all Space Marines.

Check out all the spiky bits on that Chaos Rhino (right) flanked by two Chaos Space Marines (sold separately). The Chaos Lord (far right) stands proud with his fully stocked trophy rack.
BLOOD RUNS COLD

Lizardmen run rampant through May’s Warhammer releases. First there’s Tichi-Huichis’ Raiders, this month’s Regiment of Renown. Although they are Skinks riding high atop foul Cold One lizards, they are available for hire to any army. They are searching the world over, following the prophetic dreams of Tichi-Huichi, who believes it is his sacred mission to go around the world and reclaim that which rightfully belongs to the Old Ones. Check out page 46 in this issue for all of the rules and background for these scaly mercenaries. Riding a much feared Horned One (a bigger, nastier cousin of Cold Ones) into battle, Inxi-Huizzi leads scaly charge to defend his home coasts of Lustria, pushing out unwanted settlers and other undesirables. While Lizardmen cavalry takes center stage, attention and respect must be paid to the other Skink releases. Oxayool and Tenehuuni, the Prophet of Sotek come in a package together, but have very different stories. Oxayool is one of the last of the extremely rare Chameleon Skinks, with the ability to blend in to any background, sneak up on the enemy, and shoot them with poison darts before they’re aware of his presence. Tenehuuni proclaimed the coming of Sotek, the reptilian god who rid Lustria of the Skaven. He carries the Dagger and Totem of Sotek. The dagger strikes fear into the hearts of Skaven while the totem calls great swarms of serpents into battle to aid their Lizardmen brethren. The Skink Shaman adds a mage to the ranks of these diminutive Lizardmen. In this issue you’ll find information on the Lizardmen as thick as the Jungles of Lustria.

GOTHIC

There is no peace
Multi-player Madness

Even before the Battlefleet Gothic boxed game docked into our Baltimore, Maryland headquarters, the US Staff was already scrappping together fleets and getting in some games. After all those training flights we feel fully prepared to pass on advice to those just taking off to the stars. Future High Admirals, listen up . . .

ALL TOGETHER NOW

Every once in awhile a good idea just plummets out of the sky like a runaway meteor and knocks you upside the head. This is pretty much how we all discovered how great a multi-player game Battlefleet Gothic is.

Robin Dews (studio guru and vegetarian hippie) and games designer Andy Chambers made the cross-Atlantic trip to Baltimore to show off their new game to Games Workshop USA. Everyone was so excited to play that we had more players than spaceships! The result was that we had lots of players, each controlling only a ship or two. How did it work - fantastic! Everyone had a great time, and in retrospect we realized that this may have been the best way possible to learn how to play!

So if you have a gaming group, or you live near a Games Workshop or better Rogue Trader store, we suggest you and your friends get together and try out a big game as soon as you can. This will work if you are just learning, or if you already have your own fleet.

REGULAR SCENARIOS

Most of our games ended up with about four players per side, each equipped with two cruisers each. This really allows you to appreciate a large game, without giving you too many vessels to overwhelm a beginner. Believe us, it is hard to remember who has reloaded torpedoes, and which ship was nearly crippled if you are controlling a vast armada!

All of the missions work fantastically as multi-player games, although we have been making players with the highest leadership dice it out to become High Admiral (not that you have to listen to him, it’s just someone to blame!)

SO WHAT HAVE WE LEARNED?

Here are some tips to get you started:

“The Lock On special order is your friend!”
From Scenery guru Kenny Goodman

“Imperial Ships should get stuck in as quickly as possible! The heretics tend to be faster and have longer range.”
Head of Retail, Ed Spettigue

“Don’t forget you can Brace for Impact!”
Graphics Manager, Drew Will

“Concentrate all your firepower on one enemy ship and blast ‘em.”
Everyone who has been playing!

The Chaos side cheers as it becomes clear that the Imperial Fleet cannot stop them in time!
GAME NIGHT

To put our big game theory to the test, our next Promotions gaming night (always the first Thursday of the month!) we played a Blockade Run. We had a mix of experienced Admirals and first-time players on both sides. The random set-up spread the defending Imperial forces thin, and the Chaos Admiral Kenny Goodman marshalled his fleet into a tightly compact wedge to attempt a break through.

Torpedoes were launched, energy shields were stripped away, and blast markers blossomed everywhere. Through it all we managed a fast-paced and exciting game. Even with around two dozen ships on the board, the turns were snappy, the new players got instructions so they knew what they were doing, and it felt more like a grudge match between veterans than a “basic” learn-how-to-play.

EMBRACED
BY CHAOS

While the forces of Chaos did take over the Promotions gaming night, they did not take over the game itself. So what are you waiting for, grab a bunch of your friends, a few ships each, and start playing some massive fleet engagements. The only thing we have to warn you about is to try to resist the urge to stick the bearing compass template in your eyes - it makes you look funny.

Above: After failing to prevent a Chaos breakthrough, the Imperial forces (Jason Buyaki and Rich Curren) vent their anger and gang up to destroy the few heretic stragglers! It was too little, too late for the Imperial side, but what the heck, at least they got to blow the living daylights out of a few rebel scum. Remember if you can’t win, at least blow something up!!!

PAIN IN THE ASTEROIDS

Asteroids are just the thing if you are looking for some quick and easy terrain (or celestial phenomena as Andy Chambers calls them). Our asteroids were made by Rick Smith and Kenny Goodman. Using chunks of insulation board (see page 20-21), they simply added craters with a hot soldering iron. A quick drybrush and a black primed flying base and you are ready to go!
De’Aynes Fighting Ships of the Gothic Sector

A brief treatise on ships known to have taken part in the conflict, by Gav Thorpe

Chaos Desolator class battleships – Torment, Eternity of Pain

Renegade Desolator class battleships posed particular problems to the Imperial forces during the Gothic war. Due to its powerful lances, a Desolator is ideal for attacking Imperial ships as they close into range for their gun decks or maneuver for a torpedo strike, their thick frontal armor negated by the tremendous energy beams. The Torment used this to good effect when Battlegroup Hermes tried to break the Elysium blockade, crippling the Justice and Intolerance.

and forcing the attacking Imperial fleet to break off. The Eternity of Pain seems to have made a point of hunting down enemy battleships, seeking the greatest challenge in battle perhaps. Three Apocalypse class battleships and two Vengeance class battleships from the Ultima Segmentum fell to its guns before the Gothic War, and during the war the vessel added the Holy Fire (an Emperor class battleship) and the Meros Celestia (a refitted Judgement class battleship). The Eternity of Pain was claimed as a destroyed prize on four occasions during the Gothic War, only to reappear later, damaged but operational (including a severe reactor overload which the ship somehow managed to survive).

Gothic War Training Dogma

The lance armament of the Desolator makes it a formidable opponent at long range, and so one must endeavor to close quickly and use gun deck fire to destroy the enemy. A Desolator is also one of the few traitor vessels to employ torpedoes, which poses considerable danger to our own ships attempting to make torpedo runs.

Notes: Desolator class battleships were never fitted with inertial gyro-thrusters which later became standard issue on nearly all warships. For this reason they are considerably less maneuverable than most capital ships.

"Officer present", young Pleione shrilled.

The arched chamber echoed the simultaneous squeal of fifty chairs thrust back and the slam of a hundred boot heels as the cadets came to attention. Instructor Harlen swept in and up to the dais with the majesty of a galleon under full sail, his black, high collared uniform filled to bursting point by his huge and well-fleshed frame. He favored each of the rigid cadets with a sharp-eyed stare from beneath beading, grey brows, before his bulldog mouth pronounced, "At ease, take your seats gentlemen."

Instructor Harlen remained standing as the cadets seated themselves, and gestured into the open air of the auditorium with a gold cypher-rod before he spoke again. The faint, acrid smell of burning dust stole through the chamber and the air before them shimmered as invisible hands skirted an orrery of light, which hung beneath the dome like a faerie chandelier. Its glittering planets, moons, dust shoals and asteroid fields shone with an inner luminescence. An involuntary groan escaped from the assembled cadets.

Instructor Harlen's eyes twinkled with mirth. "No, gentlemen, we will not be studying the finer points of inter-system navigation today, though I can reliably inform you that you will have that pleasure with instructor Samarase tomorrow! No, today's study will be upon Causative Stratagems of Combat, or, more simply, when, where and why you must fight." Cadet Bertran and several of his cronies let out a stifled snigger.

"You find this amusing Cadet Bertran? Pray explain the source of your merriment to the class!" Bertran Imperial Retribution class battleships - Bloodhawk, Cardinal Boras

As part of Battlegroup Sartus, the Cardinal Boras earned great acclaim during the Gothic War. The ancient Retribution class battleship saw fifteen major engagements during the war, including the famed Battle of Gethesane, during which the Cardinal Boras crippled and then boarded the Despoiler class battleship Unending Agony. The Cardinal Boras was instrumental in the destruction of the renegade-held moon of Delphi III; using specially constructed power relays to overcharge its lance battery, the Cardinal Boras reduced the small moon to dust with a thirteen-hour bombardment. The Bloodhawk performed just as astoundingly during the Gothic War, with over a dozen enemy cruisers confirmed as prizes, including two grand cruisers. Along with the 23rd Frigate Flotilla (six Sword class frigates), the Bloodhawk successfully broke the 146.M41 traitor blockade of Anvil 206, escorting much-needed supplies back to the fleet stationed at Orar. Perhaps most famous of all though, is the Bloodhawk's four hour duel with the Desolator class battleship Torment. In the Armia system, the two behemoth starships exchanged long range fire. The Torment's lance armament did little damage against the Bloodhawk at long range, but Fleet Admiral Fraser, aboard the Bloodhawk, managed to close the distance and rake the enemy's prow with two successive broadsides at close range. The Torment finally managed to disengage after the intervention of a squadron of Iconoclast destroyers, though it was three years before the vessel was seen in battle again. The Bloodhawk had also suffered terribly and it took eight months of refitting and re-arming before she was battleworthy once more.

Gothic War Training Dogma

The Retribution class battleship is best employed in one of two ways. Firstly, one can make use of its superior long range firepower, out-ranging the weaponry on most enemy vessels. Alternatively, one can close quickly and unleash a devastating broadside at close range, an attack which can cripple an enemy cruiser in a single salvo. Nor must the prow torpedoes be overlooked, either as a long range disruptive attack or to deliver the killing blow to an already damaged foe.

Notes: The Retribution class battleship, in common with most battleships does not transfer power very efficiently between the main drives and the maneuver drives. For this reason, most commanders prefer not to make tight or sudden changes of course.

Thought for the Day: Strive Harder.

snapped to attention with an ostentatious crack of the heels of his oh-so-lustrious black boots. "We fight when and where the Emperor tells us, Sir!" he barked, with the complete certainty of one who can conceive of only one answer. Instructor Harlen's shoulders slumped slightly, and his be-medalled chest cinkled as they sank.

"Be seated Cadet Bertran. A commendable reply, in its own way, but I fear that there will come a time, at least for those of you who pass their examinations;" Harlen favored Bertran with a basilisk stare which drained much of the young cadet's blood from his flushed face, "that you will, Emperor forbid, be raised to such a rank as to command your own ship, in that horrible instance things may come to such a pass that instructions from the Almighty Himself notwithstanding, you will be forced to use your own brains to decide when and where to fight. That poor, under-used organ has already been assailed with all manner of unwanted and indigestible knowledge about gunnery, propulsion, navigation, ship-keeping, celestial phenomena and other such matters, but has it even occurred to you, gentlemen, why, when, and where a battle is fought between warships?"

A deathly silence crowded in behind Harlen's last words. Most of the cadets sat with brows furrowing as they dug for an answer, while several still looked comically shocked that they had been asked for one at all. Instructor Harlen's grin was like a steel trap "I'll make it easy for you gentlemen. Simply tell me why."

Cadet Fideles snapped to attention "To protect a world, sir, or attack another..."
Styx class heavy cruisers were the mainstay of many Imperial fleets before the Mars class was created with its deadly nova cannon armament. With the advent of the newer cruisers, many of the old heavy cruisers were given less and less attention for refits and rearming. This led to a number of Captains denouncing the Imperium and turning renegade. In the Gothic War the Styx class was essential for the followers of Abaddon in many battles, as its considerable flight bays can house and launch almost as many attack craft as an Emperor class battleship. Particularly during several planetary assaults, bombers from Styx class heavy cruisers were used for destroying ground based defenses before larger vessels and troop transports entered low orbit.

GOTHIC WAR TRAINING DOGMA

Styx class cruisers are highly effective attack craft carriers. Their long range weapons batteries allow them to stand clear of the main battle line, dispatching wave after wave of bombers, fighters and assault boats. In particular it is the fighter squadrons which can pose the greatest problem for an Imperial commander, as they can form a highly mobile and effective screen against torpedo attacks. A fleet that relies overmuch on torpedos will find itself at a disadvantage when fighting a Styx.

One day, a new Cadet Fideses, be seated. Harlen paced the dais, warming to his subject. "Of course it could be argued that the destruction of the enemy vessels or the protection of your own might also be why you would fight. But this is only partially true, because such actions are meaningless save against the backdrop of an ongoing battle over a particular world." The instructor turned on his heel and raised his rich voice majestically over the murmur of hubbub among the cadets. "For you must always remember, gentlemen, that the one, true necessity for having a Navy at all is to be able to go from one world to another whenever you damn well please!" The cadets chuckled appreciatively: Harlen was paraphrasing Lord Admiral Ravensburg's fleet address of a few month's ago. Satisfied that he had focused their attentions upon himself once more, he continued in a more moderate tone.

"In this, our glorious Age of the Imperium, wars are fought on many different levels. There are the vicious, covert struggles to repress traitors, heretics and alien influence; raids and skirmishes are fought on worlds across the Imperium; while the most cataclysmic wars consume entire planets. But few of these conflicts have the awful significance of battles fought in space." Instructor Harlen gestured toward the glowing star system above their heads and a single world magnified to become a lush green and blue orb, the size of a man's head.

"In our example here there is but a single world in the star system which is capable of supporting life. Not an unusual state of affairs, indeed less than 1% of star systems contain worlds capable of sustaining life at all. In all the Galaxy, habitable worlds are the rarest prize — precious jewels which must be protected and guarded constantly, and on occasion, stolen from others."

"If the defenders of a planet can intercept invaders en route then no invasion can occur. If, however, the attackers can break through and bring the target world under bombardment from their ships then the defender's task will become arduous indeed. Thus a fleet commander has the terrible weight of decision thrust into his hands first of all. His ships are finite in number so every loss is doubly felt, and the destructive energies wielded by warships can cripple or destroy the most heavily armored battleship within minutes. Battles are also fought in the icy void, a harsh and unforgiving environment totally imical to life. The price of defeat can be prohibitively high, bringing the loss not just of irreplaceable ships but of any troops and war machines they are carrying. You have a question Cadet Pleione?"

Cadet Pleione lowered a shaky hand and came to attention "Beg to ask, sir, but won't decent planetary defenses make it next to impossible to invade anyway?"

"Indeed a defending force has many advantages on its side. Planetary defenses such as orbital weapons platforms, space stations and minefields can protect a world against small raiding forces almost indefinitely. However, only the most heavily defended hive worlds and naval bases can withstand an entire enemy battleship. This is why ships are the key to a comprehensive defense. If defending ships are available they can..."
Chaos Slaughter class cruisers –
Deathskull, Killfrenzy, Soulless, Heathen Promise

Of the many ships whose crews have turned from the Emperor’s light and mutinied in the Imperium’s 10,000 years, the Heathen Promise is one of the oldest. Having fought in the latter stages of the Great Heresy against the traitorous forces of the renegade Warmaster, the Heathen Promise was returned to the naval base at Bakka for extensive refits. After the repairs and refits were complete, the crew took over the vessel while the majority of officers were absent at the pre-launch celebrations. Five destroyers and two frigates were atomized during the resulting pursuit. The Heathen Promise has spent the last ten millennia recruiting malcontents from across the galaxy, and wherever the Heathen Promise appears, insurrection and rebellion are soon to follow. The Killfrenzy is aptly named, as it shows no regard for its own safety, on occasion ramming enemy warships when no other course of action is open.

Gothic War Training Dogma

Speed is the primary strength of the Slaughter class cruiser. Its weaponry is short ranged when compared to the majority of traitor vessels, but it does not take long for one to get in close enough to inflict a horrendous amount of damage. Fortunately, this extra speed can often leave a Slaughter class isolated, making it vulnerable to a swift, combined counter-attack by several of your own vessels.

Notes: The Slaughter class cruiser is equipped with an extremely efficient, improved thruster system, making it capable of extraordinary bursts of speed when required.

Thought for the Day: Hatred is Eternal.

either remain in close proximity to the planet and gain an advantage by fighting under the guns of the defenses, or sail forth to engage the approaching fleet before it reaches its target.”

Instructor Harlen pre-empted the next question before it was asked. “Seeking battle beyond the range of a planet’s defenses may seem unwise, gentlemen, but even the heaviest planetary defenses can only prevent a foe who attacks directly.” Harlen altered the orrery again. The planet shrank back to its proper place. A swarm of red moles entered the circle of the furthest orbit and bore down upon the blue world, at the last moment they dispersed around it, taking up positions some distance away. “An enemy fleet confronted by strong defenses may choose to remain in the star system and blockade the planet, attacking any ships going to or from it. Most worlds rely on at least some trade to supply them with food or materials which cannot be produced locally, and an extended blockade will soon cause shortages that erode the defender’s ability to fight.”

“In addition, all but the most primitive worlds have hab-sealed mining and manufacturing facilities on other planets, moons and asteroids throughout the system, which become vulnerable to capture or destruction by an enemy fleet prowling unchecked.” Tiny blue icons representing the facilities scattered around the orrery obediently winked out or turned red, until none remained. “In time the enemy fleet can establish bases and utilize the system’s resources for itself. Successive raids can be used to whittle down planetary defenses until they are weak enough to be brushed aside in a major attack. Unless the threatened world can hope for a relief force to come to its aid, it is doomed to
Imperial Mars class battlecruisers - Imperious, Marquis Lex

Although considered by some Imperial Navy officers to be undergunned in comparison to other classes of battlecruiser, the few remaining Mars class vessels in Battlefleet Obscurus continue to give good battle performances against many different foes. The most famous of these is the Imperious, which acquitted itself most admirably during the battle of Orar and, five years later, the Ultima Decimation. The exploits of Compel Bast and the Imperious tended to overshadow the achievements of the other Mars class battlecruiser in the Gothic fleet – the Marquis Lex. Commanded by Luther Kent, the Marquis Lex spent most of the Gothic War on anti-pirate duties, patrolling the Hammerhead Deeps and across the Quinrox Sound. While its more glorious sister-ship took part in a dozen major battles in the war, this was little action compared to the forty-eight smaller encounters the Marquis Lex had with Ork, Human, Eldar and Fra’ial raiders. The Marquis Lex held the record for ship on longest patrol [some one thousand, seven hundred and forty-one days] until 657M.41, and required eighteen months of refitting after the Gothic War.

Gothic War Training Dogma

Like most battlecruisers, the Mars class is intended as a fleet support vessel. In this capacity its nova cannon and launch bays provide ample long range attacking capability to supplement the armaments of its shorter-ranged consorts. Should the enemy be allowed to approach too closely, the Mars class can find itself overpowered in a straight gun duel, and so must always be provided with sufficient escorts to prevent such an occurrence.

Notes: The Mars class battlecruiser Imperious was retro-fitted with a salvaged targeting matrix after the Battle of Orar. This equipment, of alien origin, has never been successfully replicated. However, the Imperious continues to achieve consistently higher than average gunnery scores during weapons trials and holds the current fleet record for accuracy in combat.

Thought for the Day: The only true achievement is purity.

Slow strangulation and eventual capture. The blue icon representing the lone habitable planet turned red.

"These dangers make it imperative for a defending fleet to patrol aggressively and counter the threat of attacking ships. Roving scout ships and early warning beacons floating in the outer reaches of the star system can raise the alarm at an attacker’s approach. Astropaths and Navigators will also be able to sense the arrival of ships from the warp, so heed their warnings well, gentlemen. Defending ships can then attempt to intercept the foe, with luck using their local knowledge of dust clouds and asteroid fields to gain a tactical advantage in the battle. However, knowing an enemy is present and actually bringing him to battle are two entirely different matters. For even within the confines of a star system, the distances involved are vast and the mightiest ships can disappear without trace, as we shall see.”

Harlen gestured at the orrery once more and it shimmered. The blue icons reappeared and the red motes of the attacking fleet returned to their previous entry position. A swarm of blue motes detached itself from the planet and moved towards them.

"Under normal circumstances ships are made visible to their opponents only by their energy emissions and, at closer ranges, by being tracked visually. Should your enemy reduce their energy emissions by cutting power to engines and simply drift into the system, they will become virtually invisible.” The red motes faded out before the blue ones reached their proximity. In response, the blue motes flashed brightly, creating an expanding gossamer sphere, as Harlen continued, “Of course you might try..."
Chaos Idolator class raiders – Retaliators, Purgators, Unclean Ravagers, Khorne’s Disciples

A five-strong Idolator squadron known as the Retaliators performed continual hit-and-run attacks against Imperial vessels moving through the Yamda Enda-Zpandex trade route. Their favored tactic was to draw off an enemy vessel using their greater speed, then turn about sharply and rake the enemy with long range fire. Against well armored foes, the Retaliators’ lances were very effective, although the short range of this armament did expose the squadron to greater enemy fire. It was this weakness that finally saw the destruction of the raiders when they attempted to ambush a convoy escorted by the Emperor’s Wrath [a Gothic class cruiser].

Notes: The weapons batteries are of unknown design and are considerably more accurate at a range than similar Imperial weapons.

Chaos Infidel class raiders – Feliclaws, Damnators, Exterminators

With their prow torpedo tubes, the Infidel class raiders were a valuable addition to any renegade fleet. In numbers, they posed a very significant threat to Imperial ships that tried to close with their foes to shorten the firing range. In such close quarter fighting, multiple torpedo salvos from Infidel squadrons caused tremendous damage to Imperial shipping. The Infidel is also a remarkable convoy attack ship, able to use long range torpedo attacks to force escorting warships to disperse. This then allows the agile raiders to break through the Imperium’s vessels to attack the vulnerable transports.

Notes: The weapons batteries are of unknown design and are considerably more accurate at a range than similar Imperial weapons.

There is no peace among the stars

Available now for $59.99 U.S. & $85.00 CAN.
Battlefleet Gothic, the game of spaceship combat, is set during the Gothic War in the 41st Millennium; a grim time when the Imperium of Man battles for survival in a hostile galaxy. Battlefleet Gothic allows you to command fleets of warships in deadly conflict among the stars, though whether as Mankind's saviour or its destroyer is up to you!

Available now, the Battlefleet Gothic boxed game contains everything you'll need to get started. You can choose to command the fleets of the Imperium or one of its deadly enemies. The game provides the rules, scenarios and all the fleet lists you need to fight a battle, and guides you through how to paint the highly detailed, plastic Citadel Miniatures spaceships included in the box and then how to put together your own Battlefleet.

SO HOW DOES HE DO IT?

A sheet of plywood on top of a wooden frame sets the base for most of our Games Day boards. The Dwarf’s versus Marauders game is on an 8 foot by 4 foot board, and with four players on each side. With this in mind, Kenny drew up a map, and started going to town.

Right and below: We took day-by-day pictures of how the table was developing. So we remembered which days were which (and what we did that day), we used signs. It is also a great way to track Kenny’s wardrobe.

DAY ONE

Left: Kenny starts gluing down the insulation board (the bright pink stuff). Insulation board can be found at most hardware stores, such as Fleetings or Home Depot. Some sizes, like the large thick sheets Kenny prefers, can only be obtained from building contractors.

DAY SEVEN

The sunken ship, from its first appearance in magic marker (above) to the undetailed base (at right). As Kenny can tell you, it is small details like this that make a table great!

DAY Five

The last few days were spent adding the final touches - like washed up seaweed, animal skins hung on the huts, and some floating wreckage in the water.

A SMALL TASTE

So now you know a little more about one of the pre-registered tables at Games Day. Now do you see what all the excitement is about? And remember, that was just one example of the over 50 gaming tables, bring & battle boards, and we aren’t even mentioning the wacky special events, Golden Demon, special guests (like scenery guru Kenny Goodman himself), and more!!! So why aren’t you making your plans to visit Baltimore?

As a parting shot, Kenny asked us to mention that we haven’t even photographed the Dwarf Nautilus or the hidden sea monster that can suddenly rise from the depths and attack, or the dreaded Chaos Spawn fighting pit - oh wait, maybe we’re giving away too many hints about the scenario?

Left: If you have an ambitious gaming group that is looking for a new gaming challenge, why not whip up your own special scenery boards for some climactic battle? A few pieces of inspirational terrain will have your group in a gaming frenzy in no time!

Some of the Nitty Gritty

Once Kenny had a basic layout, he began working on raised areas like hills, cliffs, and rocky outcrops. The beach was cut out of the insulation board (as always, work carefully with sharp instruments), Kenny has a fast, but fantastic way of cutting and shaping the insulation board and he promised to divulge these secrets and more in upcoming issues.

The real detail work, like the crude Marauder huts, the sunken ship, and the stockade wall for the fighting pit were next. The water area was painted blue, but not before adding a few ripples and waves with putty. Once all of this was painted blue and covered with a two part resin (a very smelly stage!), it really brought the cold and rocky shores of the Sea of Claws to life! Final steps included covering the insulation board with sand (for texture) and giving it a few drybrushes - just like a giant miniature base! Some flock and pebbles help to vary the look. Soon hardy Dwarfs would march across this barren landscape seeking revenge on the Marauders!

For more details, photographs, and scenario information about this particular table, check out the Games Workshop website in the news section (another shameful plug for our electronic counterparts!).
BEHIND THE SCENES
GAMES DAY TERRAIN

You will not find a better (or larger) collection of phenomenal gaming tables than at Games Day. So what do they look like and how are they made? Our White Dwarf reporters came back with this scouting report.

A picture is worth a thousand words, a well-worn cliche that made us think about Games Day. Sure, we tell you about the amazing terrain you can come game on - but we never seem to get around to showing it to you! In addition to the brief table description (below) we thought that this year we'd give readers a little peek into what they can expect.

Warhammer Table #10 - 20,000 Beards Under the Sea - Dwarfs vs. Chaos Marauders. Chaos Marauders with their longships have been the terror of the Northern Seas for far too long, and the Dwarf Kings have had enough! They've sent a massive fleet carrying an entire Dwarf army to the shores of the Sea of Claws to destroy a Marauder hideout.

So how cool are the Games Day gaming tables? Judge for yourself!

That's the description you'll find in White Dwarf about the Dwarfs versus Marauders table, but that just doesn't do it justice. We thought we'd go into a little more detail, as well as giving you some information about how the table was constructed!

AN EPIC SAGA

It all started in the Promotions Office when scenery expert Kenny Goodman announced that he was looking for some ideas for a Dwarfs versus Chaos table. Many ideas were bandied about - an underground raid (we already did it with Skaven), a battle on top of a mountain peak (interesting, but it sounded too steep), and finally someone mentioned the idea of a Dwarf raid on a "viking" style village.

The evocative image of rocky shores, northern barbarians, and revenge-seeking Dwarfs immediately took hold, and Kenny began jotting down ideas. Because we have loads of Games Day tables, Kenny is always pressed for time (a nice way of saying that we always ask Kenny to build us a miracle, but only give him a few days to do it!).

So what sank the Marauder ship? Could it be the top secret Dwarf Nautilus?
BEST OF FIENDS!

Brian Best works in our Basingstoke store. For the last few months he has been collecting and converting a fantastic Warhammer 40,000 Chaos Space Marine army. We thought we'd better show it to you and let him explain what makes it so special. Over to you Brian...

Ever since the original Chaos Codex was released I have been fascinated by the Dark gods and their followers. Of all of them however, the one that really caught my eye and inspired me the most was Nurgle, the Lord of Decay. I really love the diseased and slime-covered look of the figures which allow for practically endless modeling possibilities.

Eventually my enthusiasm got the better of me and I resolved to build my own Nurgle force for Warhammer 40,000. Filled with excitement over the new project, I started work straight away on a daemonically possessed Predator tank. I really enjoyed building this conversion and I gained a lot of experience using Green Stuff modelling putty, which came in very handy later on. All of the blisters and pustules were modeled out of Green Stuff which I sculpted to look as though bits of Daemon were oozing out of the tank — yechh! The rest of the tank came from a deep delve into my bits box. I found bits from both the old and the new Greater Daemon of Nurgle models, as well as from stranger sources such as the really old Palanquin of Nurgle kit, which all came in very handy. Finally, the whole thing was topped off with a liberal sprinkling of Nurglings.

MORE VEHICLES!

After I had built the Predator I was really getting into a rhythm, so I decided that as building the tank had been so much fun, I would have a go at another vehicle. This time I turned my attention to a Chaos Dreadnought. Like the Predator, I wanted the Dreadnought to look really gruesome and diseased, as though bits of it were rotting away and had become completely corrupted. At this point I had the bright idea of using the Great Unclean One's hips.
With the throaty roar of engines, the Black Crusade tears across the worlds of the Imperium. Invaluable to the onslaught are the Chaos Space Marine Rhino troop transports, capable of carrying a whole squad of Chaos Space Marines into battle. The weakling followers of the false Emperor are surely doomed.

Available now for $22.99 U.S. & $35.00

The Chaos Space Marine Rhino kit is a standard Rhino, with the addition of both of these spiky plastic Chaos accessory sprues. One look at any vehicle adorned with these should leave your opponents in no doubt as to where your loyalties lie!

Sprues shown at approx. 30% of actual size.

"Let the galaxy burn!"
larger areas like the huge sword and dragging chains. I think this simple but effective paint scheme sets off the highly detailed figure perfectly.

THE END IS NIGH

The army was pretty much complete by this time. I had four squads of Chaos Space Marines, two vehicles and a Greater Daemon to lead them. To round off the whole army, I put together a Daemon pack of Plaguebearers and based up all my spare Nurglings (the ones that hadn't been stuck onto other things!). The Daemons were basecoated Bubonic Brown for the Plaguebearers and Goblin Green for the Nurglings, washed all over in the same way as the Chaos Space Marines and then drybrushed in parts with the base color of either Goblin Green or Bubonic Brown before being given their final highlight.

The army has been so much fun to collect and paint that I really didn't want to stop! Realistically however there was not a lot more that the army needed, so I started to look around for a fresh challenge and recently I have begun work on a Warhammer Chaos Khorne army. Who knows, if they inspire me in the same way as my Nurgles army has, you may yet be seeing them in these hallowed pages at some future date!

The centerpiece of the army is this splendid Great Unclean One.

The whole army lined up and ready for battle. As you can see, nearly every figure has been converted in some way.
and upper legs in place of the normal Dreadnought legs. This was quite tricky to achieve and I was glad that I had already had plenty of practice using Green Stuff!

Once the legs were done, I turned my attentions to the head. Now, the Chaos Dreadnought head is all very nice and ‘Chaos Space Marine’ but I wanted mine to look more Daemonic, so I called once more upon my long-suffering Great Unclean One kit and remodelled its head to look like a giant Plaguebearer with a huge central eye. The difficult bits were now out of the way and the rest was fairly straightforward. Another thorough search of my bits box turned up some cool Chaos Spawn bits, and these were glued into place all over the model. Finally I remodeled the left claw to make it just that little bit more fearsome.

PLAGUE MARINES

By now I had spent quite a lot of time on my army and I still only had two models to show for all my trouble. There was nothing for it, I would have to paint some Chaos Space Marines. By playing around with painting techniques I soon developed a quick way to paint rotting, filthy armor effectively. First I sprayed on a coat of Bubonic Brown and then washed the whole figure with Flesh Ink. While the ink was still wet, I dappled the figure with a mixture of brown and black inks. Finally I highlighted the figure in downward strokes with Bubonic Brown followed by Skull White. I find that painting on the highlights in this way really gives the impression of slime and muck oozing down the armor. After I had painted a couple of squads of Chaos Space Marines like this, I decided to add a squad of Plague Marines. These were painted in much the same way as the rest of the figures except that I started with a Goblin Green basecoat instead of Bubonic Brown. I was so pleased with the splendidly horrible effect this gave that I immediately set to work converting and painting up a unit of Plague Marine Terminators! Because these were going to be my shock troops, I spent quite a long time on them. In particular I am very happy with the Terminator Champion who got a Zombie’s head. This looked particularly effective but it still seemed to be lacking a certain something, so I broke out the Green Stuff again and modeled an eye hanging out of its socket. This made all the difference – now he really looked like a true devotee of the Lord of pestilence and decay! The rest of the Terminators were much more straightforward but still came in for a lot of added tentacles, pustules and random bits of Chaos Spawn (an excellent source of mutations! – Iain Compton). While I was on a bit of a roll and getting quite good at converting Terminators, I added an Aspiring Champion to the first Plague Marine squad. This time I based the conversion on an old Warhammer Chaos Champion of Nurgle figure, using this for the upper body and head, which were attached to the lower half of a standard Chaos Terminator. The Terminators were painted in the same way as the Plague Marines. My army was starting to look like a unified force!

A LEAN, GREEN, FIGHTING MACHINE

Now the bulk of the army was done, but I was still missing a leader. I thought about the options for a while before deciding that the only choice for me was the fantastic Great Unclean One. (Note: Brian sent us his army before Codex: Chaos Space Marines had been published and so his army was designed from the army list in the 40K rulebook, where Greater Daemons could lead an army instead of a Daemon Prince or Chaos Lord – Iain Compton). Just as with the Plague Marines earlier, he got a basecoat of Goblin Green before being washed all over with several coats of Dark Green Ink until I had built up a really strong contrast between the recessed areas and the rest of the model. Once this was done I highlighted different areas with as many shades of green and brown as possible to get a blotchy, mottled effect. After that I painted in all of the fine detail, such as the open sores and gaping holes, as well as the Deep within the dark, steamy jungle of Lustria, the drums of war sound. A new spawning of lizardmen march forth to unleash cold-blooded savagery upon the invader.

THE ARMY ROSTER

When you plan your army you should keep your Warhammer Armies Lizardmen book handy as a guide. From the book you can start plotting what to collect. So grab a roster sheet and start working out your 1,000 point army now! The roster sheet opposite shows Qerm-Itt’s Lizardmen Pyramid Temple Guard army. We’ve worked this out as an example of the sort of army you could start with.

All Lizardmen armies are led by a Slann Mage-Priest. As this is a small force it will be led by one of the younger Slann (this means he is only about 7,000 years Old!) and is only a level 1 Mage. As he is more vulnerable than other, older Slann, I will give him the Sword of Swift Slaying (always strikes first in combat) to aid him if he gets into trouble, and the Amber Amulet (regenerates one Wound per turn) to keep him alive.

The next selections will be the core regiments. The first unit, which I have named Chotek’s Cohort, is fourteen Saurus warriors armed with hand weapons. This regiment has a command group and a Saurus Champion who I have named Stova (Saurus like to keep their names short and to the point). Our next two core regiments will be made up of Skinks, as they are cheap and very versatile. The first one, which I have named the Cohort of the Turquoise Hawk, consists of Skinks armed with poisoned javelins and carrying shields. I intend this regiment to support the Saurus in combat, so I have also given them a Kroxigor to flesh out. This unit is led by a Skink Hero, who I have named Hi’fifve. Our final regiment is the Cohort of the Green Scorpion, which contains Skinks with short bows and poisoned arrows. Led by a Skink Champion named Ok’Doqi, they will skirmish, protecting one flank.

To finish this army off I want to have a fast moving regiment which will speed down one flank and engage the vulnerable enemy war machines or other fast moving enemy units. Normally I would choose Terradons for this task, but since I can now get my hands on Cold One Riders, I will pick a regiment of these ferocious riders led by a Skink Champion. Now on to collecting the army itself...
A LIZARD SPEAKS

Nick, I like you. I owe the Lizardmen army and am in the process of building my army up to a reasonable size to play my friends. The only problem is that I am on a limited budget, so I need some pointers to show me what I should get first.

So I was wondering if you could do a bit in White Dwarf to show the basic outline of getting your first 1,000 points and then how to expand it. I have got a start of 20 Skink archers and 15 Saurus warriors. This outline has been done for the Empire and Undead armies on release of the regiment box sets, but maybe you could twist Fat Bloke’s arm so you could put the Lizardmen in White Dwarf?

Domenic Cianciola

Well, who says we don’t listen to what’s going on out there. After bribing Fat Bloke with a bacon butty (with added lamb), I got the go-ahead. So here it is - enjoy!

Over the next few pages I will be putting together a Lizardmen army (hurrah!). Now before I begin collecting an army I always read the background, as this gives me an idea of what initial troops to collect. I also try to collect an army that I am inspired by, as this makes painting the miniatures easier and playing with the army a more enjoyable experience. So I search for reasons why I should collect an army. The first reason why I collect Lizardmen is that I find all their Aztec and Mayan influences intriguing and it gives me a heavy cultural base to draw inspiration from. I also enjoy the fact that the Lizardmen are fighting according some preordained plan of the Old Ones, so if you lose your games you can say to your opponent it was all part of the Old Ones’ great plan. Two reasons to collect the Lizardmen that have absolutely nothing to do with the fact they are extremely hard to beat in combat (but you like that reason too, don’t you Nick? – Paul Sawyer).

Like all armies that I collect, I follow a basic formula of army building. The Lizardmen, like all my armies, are planned out into manageable, collectable steps. I find it easier to collect armies in steps of a 1,000 points at a time, as this does not take long to collect or paint. Plus once you have completed your first 1,000 points you can go out and play games with it.

There are some important things that you should include in your initial 1,000 points, the first being a couple of core regiments to form the center of your army. These are basically large units of infantry such as Saurus warriors or Skinks. Now Lizardmen do not have any Warhammer Regiment boxed sets yet, so we cannot get our regiments in convenient chunks of 15 or 20 models. There are however, plastic Skink and Saurus boxed sets available, so these core regiments can still be built up easily and cost-effectively with the addition of metal command groups.

The next and most important thing a Lizardmen army needs is a Slann Mage-Priest to lead it. He’s the only model that must be included in the army. Don’t worry though, there are four levels of Mage-Priest, each one more powerful (and costing more points) than the next. When you expand your army to 2,000 or even 3,000 points you can keep him as your general and up his magic level.

COLLECTING THE LIZARDS

The background in Warhammer Armies Lizardmen states that many of the Lizardmen forces are the private armies of Slann Mage-Priests and are used to guard their pyramid temples from would-be plunderers. Our army will also be the private army of a Mage-Priest, so the collective forces will be the Pyramid Temple Guard (a handy name for our army). Once you have chosen your core units and have got your Mage-Priest, you are ready to look at the other troop types that make up a Lizardman army. The army does not have many elite units to choose from; the only regiments available being the deadly, halberd-wielding Temple Guards and the ferociously fast Skink Cold One riders. Luckily the Saurus warrior is capable of taking on all comers with his two Strength 4 attacks, three dice Leadership tests and natural heavy armor.

The Skink however is the weaker cousin of the Saurus: low Toughness, low Weapon Skill and low Leadership. However they have a few advantages over the Saurus. They are cheap, so you can get lots of them, and in large numbers they are just as deadly as their larger cousins. They can also have the mighty Kroxxigors (a much larger, harder cousin of the Saurus) in their ranks, bolstering their Leadership and fighting ability. The Skinks can also carry poisoned javelins and bows, giving them Strength 4 missile weapons, making Skinks very efficient, cheap skirmish troops. Skinks are also more intelligent than the Saurus and can train and ride the savage Cold Ones and the high flying Terradons. Skinks also ride the huge War Stegadons into battle. These living battering rams cause immense damage when they charge!

Skinks also herd Salamanders – large sail-backed lizards that spit great globs of corrosive venom at the foe. And finally you can get Skink Shamen, who, although not as mighty as the Slann Mage-Priests, are still very useful to have around.
Saurus warriors are the basic troop type of your Lizardmen army. They are excellent fighters with two attacks, high Strength, high Toughness, high Leadership and natural heavy armor. They are a match for most things your opponent can throw at you. However, their poor Initiative is their biggest weakness (even Dwarfs go first!), and if you are unlucky your opponent will kill the first rank leaving you nothing to reply with. To survive this a Saurus regiment needs to be at least ten models strong and ranked up with a command group of a Standard Bearer, Musician, and Saurus Champion (Saurus Champions excel at challenges; their three Strength 5 attacks make them the perfect hero killers!).

Our regiment will be fifteen models strong and is led by a Saurus Champion who I have named Stova. I have given Stova the Silver Sigil Sword (extra +3 Initiative) which means he will be hitting before or at the same time as his opponent. This unit will be the anchor of the Lizardmen battleline, advancing with Qerm-It and guarding his flank. If the army is faced with a more numerous foe like Skaven or Goblins, then this regiment will form up around the Mage-Priest so he can benefit from their rank bonus.

We can easily expand this regiment with the addition of another box of Saurus warriors or even add a Saurus Hero to the front rank to increase its potential in combat.

MARKS OF THE OLD ONES

Those that carry the marks of the Old Ones are frequently endowed with greater intelligence, keener eyesight, greater strength and endurance and more courage than the rest. These marks could be a different colored crest, stripes, spots or different skin colour. A good example of this is the highly regarded vermilion crest which is considered to signify inspiration from the sun god and is known as the ‘Mark of Chotek’.

These Lizardmen soon emerge as leaders of regiments, while others are selected to be scribes, acolytes, overseers, commanders or shamans. It is the Mage-Priests who scrutinize the marks and consider their implications. For example, it is common knowledge that the biggest Skinks with the largest crests make the best riders for Coid Ones.

You can use these marks to characterize your army like we have with ours. Below is a chart describing the color and what each mark means:

The first 1,000 points of our army will form a core around which a larger force can be built. This 1,000 point army represents a Slann Mage-Priest’s private pyramid guard – his own personal army which he can use to protect his pyramid temple and to attack would-be plunderers.

THE SLANN MAGE-PRIEST

Lizardmen armies are led by a Slann Mage-Priest, who is held aloft on a palanquin. He normally leads his own personal army that defends his pyramid temple. The Slann come from a number of different spawnings that took place thousands of years ago – from the surviving Slann of the second spawning (all the first spawning are dead) to the younger Slann of the fifth spawning. Our army is led by one of these younger Slann, who we have called Qern-Itt. He represents one of the many lower rank Mage-Priests that do the bidding of the greater Mage-Priests who rule the Lizardmen cities. Our Mage-Priest is a level 1 Slann, who is, to be fair, not a great fighter compared to a Human or Elf general, but is considerably tougher and harder to kill. He has an outstanding save of a +4 against each Wound suffered thanks to his Shield of the Old Ones, which is not modified by the Strength of the attack and cannot be negated! For some added protection I have also given him the Amber Amulet which regenerates one lost Wound per turn. He also has the Sword of Swift Slaying. This cheap magic weapon allows the user to strike first regardless of Initiative or charges and will give your opponent a nasty shock when he charges (and he will) your Slann Mage-Priest.

Qern-Itt will be placed next to the Cohort of Chotek Saurus regiment in the battline. Here he will gain protection from enemy units that wish to charge him (your opponent will have to risk the Saurus unit which would in turn charge him in the flank). Or if I face armies such as Skaven, with large numbers of troops, I would place him within the Saurus regiment so he can benefit from their rank bonus and add his fighting ability to their own considerable prowess.

SKINK HERO

In every spawning there are certain, individual Lizardmen that are marked in some unusual way, with vivid spots, stripes, skin coloring or large crests. These markings are considered favors from the Old Ones themselves and the individual becomes a champion, or hero for their generation. Our Skink Hero, who we have named Hi’Fifve is so marked; his white skin coloring marks him out as destined for greatness.

Hi’Fifve leads the Cohort of the Turquoise Hawk into battle and is probably second-in-command of the entire army (Saurus captains are very good at leading their regiments, but large, army-scale tactics escape them completely). He is armed with the Blade of Sea Gold which gives him an additional -3 on the enemy save, making it easier for him to strike them down in combat.

COLD ONE RIDERS

The savage Cold Ones are ridden by the Great Crested Skinks, who are bigger and stronger than normal Skinks. The Cold One riders are led by a Skink Champion who we have named Mavriq and who carries the Mark of Chotek. This also gives the regiment their name – the Riders of Chotek.

The Skinks are all armed with spears, for a huge Strength 5 when charging! However even the Great Crested Skink riders are a little fragile after the initial charge and are no match for heavily armored knights (we would have to enlarge the unit by at least another five models first). Now the ferocious Cold Ones can compensate for the Skinks’ weaknesses, but you should aim to engage small units or enemy skirmishers, as they are more likely to break in the first turn.

With this in mind, the Riders of Chotek will try to outflank the enemy and engage their war machines or tie up the enemy’s own faster moving elements.
Our first 1,000 points is more than capable of taking on a force of a similar size. It is also a good start to our Lizardmen army, as it gives us almost all our core regiments to begin with. All we need to do now is add some of the fancier bits, like Terradons or Stegadons. But the first thing I do once I have raised an army is play a few games with it. This gives me an idea of what I need to strengthen my army. After a few games, the next step is to expand this force by another 500 or 1,000 points.

At the moment, one of the army’s weaknesses is a lack of magical support. Now Slann Mage-Priests are very powerful once they reach the higher magic levels. To be worthy of leading a larger army, Qerm-Itt must be elevated to a Mage-Priest Champion or even a Master Mage-Priest. For some additional support in the magic area we could also use a Skink Shaman. Although they are not as powerful as a Mage-Priest, they can carry two magic items (that’s two Dispel Magic Scrolls), making them very useful to have around.

Of course Slann Mage-Priests are not the only characters available. Amongst the ranks of the Lizardmen there are Champions and Heroes. Every unit should have a Champion to lead it (especially the Skink units!). Not only do they bolster the unit’s fighting strength, but Saurus Champions excel at challenges. The Lizardmen also have Heroes – we already have a Skink Hero in our army. Heroes are best used to bolster the fighting strength and Leadership of the Lizardmen units. A Saurus Hero armed with a sword is a very dangerous opponent.

The basic Lizardmen warrior, the Saurus, is well suited to the rigors of the Warhammer battlefield and is probably the best rank and file troop you can get in the game next to the Chaos Warrior. It is in the regiment area that the army needs strengthening the most. As long as you keep the Saurus regiments at least ten strong they can take on all comers. If you arm them with spears you have an awesome defensive unit. A unit that is five wide and three ranks deep can bring fifteen attacks (not counting any Champion) to bear in a round of combat. But as good as the Saurus warriors are, they are not the only troops available to the Mage-Priest. There are the Saurus Temple Guards – the veteran Saurus of the Lizardmen armies. This regiment should be at least ten to fifteen models strong, they already come with halberds (so they are hitting at Strength 5!) and work well with a Saurus Hero to lead them. If you arm the Temple Guards up they can get a hefty 3+ armor save (2+ if you take the Standard of Shielding)!

Skinks meanwhile are a little like Goblins – you will need lots of them! Now we already have two very large units of Skinks, one beefed up for combat and one for skirmishing. We could expand the Cohort of the Turquoise Hawk or add another unit of skirmishing Skinks by getting another plastic Skink boxed set. The true strength of Skinks is their versatility; they are the only ones who can ride, which makes them very useful indeed.

We already have a unit of Cold Ones in our army, although we could do with expanding it by at least another five models and upgrading the Champion to Hero. This will make the unit considerably harder to beat, so they can take on much larger regiments. The Skinks can also ride a Terradon which carries two Skinks on its back giving the model 2 Wounds. The Terradon also carries rocks which it can drop with pin point accuracy upon the enemy. Their biggest advantage is that they can fly, so getting behind the enemy to silence his war machines is made a lot easier. Arm the Skink riders with poisoned javelins and you should silence the war machines without resorting to combat.

Perhaps the most powerful creatures in the Lizardmen army are the huge Stegadons. No Slann Mage-Priest should go to war without one! These are living battering rams, easily able to smash up the enemy’s most powerful units. I normally place the Stegadon at the end of the battleline next to a Skink regiment like the Cohort of the Turquoise Hawk. These two units advance together (both moving 6") and charge the same unit. The charged unit normally disintegrates in the first round of combat, leaving the two units free to roll down the entire enemy battleline.

Another powerful Lizardmen is the Kroxigor. These are fearsome creatures and make excellent shock troops. Armed with their double-handed bronze axes they can smash apart small regiments and heavily armed knights with ease. You can also place the Kroxigor in regiments of Skinks. The Skinks swarm around the Kroxigor, encouraged by the power of their bigger cousin. In game terms this means the Skinks have Leadership 9, benefit from an extra three Strength 7 attacks and cause fear!

Even though the Lizardmen do not have any war machines, they do have a great substitute – the Salamander. This sail-backed lizard can spit venom at the enemy. The corrosive poison eats through anything so your opponent gets no saving throw! Salamanders work well in pairs, placed at the end of the battleline, so you can get clear shots into the ranks of your enemies. Always try to aim for the enemy’s elite troops, to whittle down their numbers. If you cannot afford the points for a Salamander in your army, you can always mount a giant bow on the Stegadon’s howdah. This performs the same task, but be warned, it does miss an awful lot.

The smallest creatures in a Mage-Priest’s army are the swarms. Lizardmen pay half the points cost for Lizard and Snake swarms, both of which excel at slowing down flanking forces or fast moving units like cavalry. The Snake swarms with their slow movement are also very good at guarding the Mage-Priest’s rear, stopping the enemy from charging him from behind.

Lizardmen armies really do not have any weak links, so it is really a case of designing an army to fit your own fighting style. Over the page is Qerm-Itt’s Temple Pyramid Guard army, which has been expanded by an additional 1,000 points.
HOW TO PAINT
SKINKS

By Iain Compton

 Fellow Lizardman Iain Compton has painted a lot of Lizards. In fact he has a huge Lizardmen army of his own, so we have asked him to share some of his painting secrets.

Jain: Skink regiments should be huge, so the only practical way of painting them up is in blocks of at least ten. I find the best way is to line them up in front of you and paint one stage on every model before moving on to the next bit. This allows the paint to dry properly on each model and is quicker as you don’t have to mess about opening and closing pots or changing water.

Stage 1: After I have basied up all the models, I undercoat them with Citadel white undercoat spray as my Skinks are going to be orange.

Stage 2: The first thing to paint is the skin. I use Blazing Orange, watered down using Orange Ink until the paint is almost an ink itself. This produces a very bright effect and starts to shade the model. Then I carefully paint in all of the other base colors and larger areas of detail. I have chosen to paint all the cloth in Enchanted Blue, so that it will stand out.

Stage 3: The next step is to apply highlights to the model. Because the skin was painted with very thin paint, it is already partly shaded. All I need to do is pick out the tips of the raised areas with Golden Yellow.

Stage 4: Finally I pick out all the fine detail such as the dagger, and paint the eyes black. I also shade some of the deeply recessed areas of the skin with a little Chestnut Ink. All that remains now is to finish the base with Goblin Green paint and some flock, and a new spawning is ready to join the cohorts of the temple-city!

SKINKS

S kinks normally form the majority of the regiments in a Lizardmen army; they are cheap and versatile. They are also more intelligent than a Saurus and can train and ride the various beasts (Terradons, Stegadons and Cold Ones) that the Lizardmen use in their armies. When used as foot troops you have to be careful - they are not very good fighters and with their low Leadership they have a tendency to run away a lot (even on 3 dice Leadership tests).

Skinks can be used in two ways – either as skirmishers or fighting regiments. In our army I have one of each type of unit. I will start with the first one – the Cohort of the Turquoise Hawk. This regiment will take its place in the main battle line on Qerm-It’s opposite flank. The regiment is armed with javelins and shields and has a command group of a Standard Bearer and Musician in the unit. The trick for fighting with Skinks in this formation is to use large numbers – the regiment needs to be at least four ranks deep and must have at least one Kroxigor in the unit. The Skinks gain confidence from having such a brute in their ranks so they can benefit from its higher Leadership and better fighting characteristics. The unit is also led by the Skink hero Hi’Fifve, increasing this regiment’s combat potential, making it just as hard as the Saurus regiment.

Our second regiment, the Cohort of the Green Scorpion, is our skirmishing unit. Again this is a large regiment with all the Skinks armed with short bows and poisoned arrows. The unit has a Standard Bearer, Musician, and Champion named Ok’Doqi. At the start of the battle this unit will be set up in a skirmish formation on a flank, and harass the enemy with missile fire. If the enemy threatens this flank they can form up into a block (five wide, three ranks deep) and slow down or stop their advance.

Both units can easily be expanded with additional blister packs or plastic Skink boxed sets. But I would be tempted to form another unit of ten Skinks to skirmish in front of the main battle line, again to slow down the enemy’s advance.

The Lizardmen Skink plastic boxed set is the quickest way to build up the huge regiments of Skinks needed for your army.

Cohort of the Turquoise Hawk – Skinks with javelins & shields, supported by a Kroxigor.

Cohort of the Green Scorpion – Skinks with short bows.
Mage-Priest Qerm-Itt with his bodyguard of Temple Guards and a regiment of Saurus warriors with spears.

From the prophecy of Mage Lord Zhiocac, translated from a recovered tablet of Izta, Imperial Scholar Hulicis's footnote: "It is believed this prophecy is still to pass."

The Saurus warriors of the Chotek Cohort charge the invaders.
Wrestling with the incantable scrolls of the Slann Mage-Priests is no picnic, I can tell you. The latest batch brought to me from Lucenja by Grolf the Dwarf is a real headache. The script itself is not a problem as it was written in a very good, cursive Skink handwriting, with a decent porcupine quill. What I really got stuck on is the future intentional habitual dative participle of the old Sanarian verb zloid which means 'to ride'. All too frequently this is written with the determinative of a small, red Skink hind leg, which is easily confused with the determinative xicc 'to skirmish' (literally 'scurry about'), especially in scrolls dating to after the great migration of the red-crested Skinks, which of course counts for the majority of surviving Lucadian scrolls.

So how are scholars such as myself to interpret a sentence like huri Sslamamacec xha hahzilamon duh skinki zloid (or xicc) intehuaha xicca? This occurs in an important tactical text, said to have been dictated by the Old Ones themselves, and slavery copied for untold generations. It may be translated thus: 'for the Old Ones decreed that three score Skinks shall ride upon the Stegadon' or 'for the Old Ones decreed that three score Skinks shall skirmish beside the Stegadon'. I am sure the implications of this will not be lost on anybody. I cannot blame Skink scribal error, because they clearly knew what they meant. So what did the Old Ones intend? Who can say?

Welcome to the third part of Jungle Fever (check out WD23 & WD25 for the first two articles). Some months ago now I was inspired by the ‘Raising the Army of Rezephant’ section in the back of the Lizardmen book, and started to build terrain for my Lizardmen army to fight over. I built the terrain in my lunch hours at work. To decide exactly what themed terrain to build I turned to the Terrain Generator table in the Warhammer Battle Book. For each entry on the table I would build a piece of suitable Lizardmen terrain to fill it – from jungle (for the wood entry) to a ruined temple (which could be a steep hill or double up as the tower entry).

WHAT’S BEEN DONE

So far I have managed to build a spawing pond (which can be the very difficult ground or lake entry) and a variety of jungle trees made from garden wire, masking tape and plastic cups! From these relative simple terrain pieces I pooled together my newly practiced modeling skills and set out to build a village. The village is a collection of Skink barrios. The barrios were built from corrugated cardboard off-cuts. They are based on the Ork building featured in the ‘How to Build Wargames Terrain’ book, which I’ve used to learn different modeling techniques and for inspiration for new ideas. Using all the techniques I have learned so far, I even managed to build a Lizardmen fortress surrounded by a moat (check out Jungle Fever 2 in WD225).

Everything I have built so far has used easy to come by materials and I have spent very little money on any of the projects except for replenishing the PVA glue. I have used corrugated cardboard, cereal packet cardboard and even collected rocks from the ground instead of making them out of polystyrene. So it is pretty easy to get the material you need to build terrain.

WARNING! Once you start building terrain it is extremely hard to stop and you will soon find yourself knee deep in PVA glue, corrugated cardboard and bits of strangely shaped polystyrene. So read on at your own peril...

WHAT’S TO COME

In my first article I had just finished my village and was thinking about making a small central piece for it. This will be a sacrificial pit dedicated to Soek (no Skink village is complete without one). Of course when I’ve built this it still leaves me with difficult ground, hills, steep hills and even a temple – so there’s still loads to do. Well here goes nothing...

THE SECRET OF MY SUCCESS

I’ll let you into a secret; I’m not a great terrain builder. Sure, I’ve built hills and made woods but I have never undertaken such a big project before. Every technique I have used in all my Jungle Fever terrain (and that includes the Fortress) can be found within the pages of this totally invaluable terrain building guide written by Nigel Stillman.

If you’ve been inspired by my Jungle Fever articles, and are going to have a go at building terrain for your games, I suggest you get hold of this book. It’s crammed full of ideas, tips and modeling projects, ranging from the very simple to more complicated projects.
Oxayotl is one of the last of the Chameleon Skinks, a breed that was all but destroyed with the destruction of the city of Pahuax, during the collapse of the polar warp gates. He is amazingly stealthy, and can creep right up to the enemy without being noticed, using his unique powers to hide even in the open! He then strikes with his blowpipe, firing darts tipped with deadly tarantula venom.

INXI-HUINZI

Inxi-Huinzi is the most cunning and persistent Skink leader that has ever been appointed to contain the upstart colony of Skeggi, founded by the Norse. To this end Inxi-Huinzi and his Cold One Riders prowl the rain forest, pampas tracts and sial grass, searching for Norse raiders from the colony.

TENEHUINI - PROPHET OF SOTEK

Tenehuini is the Prophet of Sotek and is a Skink Shaman. He led the Red Crested Skinks on a great migration from the plague-ridden city of Chaque, and proclaimed the coming of Sotek, who was to rid Lustria of the evil rat spawn.

Eventually, after sacrificing thousands of Skaven to Sotek, the god was invoked and a plague of Snakes hit Lustria of the Skaven of Clan Pestilens. Since that time, Sotek has been the greatest of the Lizardmen gods.

The Prophet of Sotek is shielded from injury by his god, and carries the Dagger of Sotek, which strikes with the wrath of Sotek and puts fear into the hearts of the Skaven. He also carries the sacred Totem of Sotek, on which the plaque containing the prophecy of Sotek is mounted. During a battle he can invoke Sotek's wrath, summoning Serpents from their hiding places to attack the enemies of the Lizardmen.

Oxayotl, Tenehuini and Inxi-Huinzi designed by Alan Perry. Horned One designed by Alan Perry and Trish Morrison.

JUNGLE COPSE

I wanted one side to have a small jungle copse on it. Not wanting to make any wire trees, I used the plastic cup tree technique (see the first Jungle Fever article in WD223) and built three trees of varying sizes. These trees were then glued onto the hill. I buried a couple of stones into one side of the hill, filling the gaps with long grass. The long grass was made out of yard brush bristles sprayed Dark Angels Green. I sprinkled on small stones for added effect and the copse was finished.

JUST A COUPLE MORE TOUCHES

The hill just needed a couple more touches to finish it off. I added paving slabs to the centre of the hill. I made these in the same way as those on the spawning pond. The hill was then covered in PVA and dipped into a box of sand (I did this twice to make sure I had maximum coverage). When it was dry I went crazy with coarse turf, almost covering the ruined side with it (I love the overgrown effect). The hill was then sprayed black – doh! In my haste in constructing the hill I forgot it was made out of polystyrene. I stared at the hill in disbelief at what I had done and waited for the hill to melt as the spray paint dried.

Luckily nothing happened! I only had a very minor piece of melting which I could pass off as rubble. It seems the hills are made out of polystyrene that can take spray paint reasonably well. The model was then painted Goblin Green with some brown patches, while all the stones and rubble were painted grey. Finally the trees were added and the model was finished... phew!

TOO CROWDED!

Looking at the hill I found only one real problem – it was too crowded with scenery to place many models on it! I was making gaming pieces, not something just to look at! When building the next two I would have to make sure I did not go crazy and add too much of scenery.

Right: I only added a small amount of rubble to one side of this hill. I dug out a small hole in its side with my finger and I couldn’t resist adding more coarse turf.

Above: A less covered hill. I could not resist adding a few pieces of detail like the standing stone and patches of coarse turf. I was more careful this time to make sure there were actually places for my Lizards to stand!

Above: The third and last hill I built. I went a little more crazy with the scenery on it. I added a small altar next to the egg using a glyph plate, and a group of standing stones in the far corner. And of course I had to add some coarse turf.

Right: An impassable section the hill. Using my fingers (handy modeling tools) I gouged out sections of the hill for a more rocky appearance. This was helped when I sprayed the hill black and it melted the gouged out areas.

Above Right: I used a Jurassic Park toy for the egg (thanks Simon), highlighted up from black to white. I then covered it with gloss varnish to look like eggshell. I also added paving stones around it to give the impression of an abandoned temple.
THE VILLAGE SACRIFICIAL PIT
(or the Slain shower)

The Skink village needed a centerpiece, a place where Skinks gather, a focal point for the community. How about a pit to drag poor, unfortunate captives for sacrifice to Sotek? The pit started out as a village totem pole, which I made out of two metal glyph plates glued to a strip of polystyrene. The totem was going to be stuck to the base of my two story barrio but I changed my mind (I actually forgot to leave any space for it on the barrio’s base – doh!).

The pit was a really simple piece to for me to build. I cut out a square of polystyrene, stacked three metal glyphs together to make the steps and glued it all onto a base. I then broke a corner of the square with my finger and covered it and the front of the pit with coarse turf (available from modeling shops). I washed over the top with watered down PVA glue – this stiffens the coarse turf, making it easier to paint. I finished off the base with coral gravel and then sand.

I used polystyrene to make the square and the totem pole. This material has a nasty habit of melting when sprayed with paint. To make sure this did not happen to my model, I used watered down PVA and mixed sand into it. I painted this mix onto any exposed polystyrene – this should stop spray paint from melting it and ruining the piece. For added peace of mind, when the mix was dry I made up another batch of watered down PVA and painted this over the top of the texture mix. This would reinforce and seal the texture mix so hopefully none of the spray would get through to melt the polystyrene. When this was dry I took a deep breath and sprayed it black.

It worked! Reinforcing the polystyrene with the texture mix and PVA left me with minimal melting. Where the model had melted, it actually added texture to the model. It was time to paint it.

The pit was painted Shadow Grey and then highlighted white. The coarse turf was painted Dark Angels Green, then Goblin Green and finally Sunburst Yellow. I finished off the base with Goblin Green, then added some brown for rubble and worn ground.

The sacrificial pit was finished and with it the village was complete. It was time to decide on my next modeling project. I’d built the jungle, created the spawning pond (counts as very difficult ground) deep river or lake) and even raised a village. I decided it was time for some hills.

HILLS

I had deliberately avoided the hill entry because I knew making them would be incredibly messy. Plus I really did not have the space to build them at work. Luckily by the time I had finished my village there were new Warhammer hills available unflocked. This was great, saving me a lot of time and make the hills much easier to build.

A ONE LEVEL HILL
(or the Skink hopscotch board)

I grabbed one of the hills and experimented on it using almost all the techniques I had learnt so far. Looking at photographs of jungle hills I found in books, they were mainly overgrown or were covered in rubble. I decided that one side would be covered in jungle and in true Tarzan movie tradition the other side would feature a collapsed temple plinth. The middle would be paved in the same way as the Spawning Pond.

I wanted the collapsed end section buried under a tangle of overgrowth and strewn rubble. This would also be an area of difficult ground. I buried some suitably shaped stones (I find concrete or brick bits are best for this) by cutting holes into the hill, pouring in PVA and then inserting the stones. I repeated this same technique for the glyph plates. I then covered the temple area with coral stones for an uneven surface. I let this dry whilst I thought about the other side of the hill.
THE RUINED TEMPLE

A quick scan of the Wargames Terrain book showed me that the temple could be made up from layers of polystyrene. I didn’t have any... so I used corrugated cardboard instead. I cut out a rough square shape and four sides out of the card. Then using my hot glue gun (PVA does the same job) I stuck these together at right angles and my base was finished. I repeated this a bit smaller for the top section, and then glued the two halves together using PVA. The gaps around the side of the temple were filled with DAS clay and then I left it to dry.

All Lizardmen temples have stone steps leading to the top. I’d never made steps before but I did have an idea! Stacking corrugated cardboard together, staggered at intervals of 5mm made great steps. I then cut some sides for the staircase out of corrugated cardboard and glued them to the stairs. The gaps in the cardboard were filled in with DAS. When the clay dried I glued the stairs to the now fully formed pyramid.

GLYPHS & RUBBLE

Before adding glyphs, I based the pyramid with a thick piece of cardboard, the edges of which I sloped by cutting at a 45 degree angle. When the pyramid was firmly attached I started to add the glyphs to it. I glued these onto the walls with superglue. I also glued a few glyphs on the base, as a few plates would have fallen down over the centuries.

With this done I added paving slabs (using thin cardboard cut into 2 by 2cm squares) to the front of the model, and sand to the base. Then I went absolutely crazy adding coral stones to the pyramid – I built up almost all the rubble in layers of small stones and lots of PVA (an entire bottle!). When the rubble dried I added loads of coarse turf – the temple had to be overgrown as well. Finally, when this was all dry I washed all over the rubble and coarse turf areas with watered down PVA glue and then left it to dry (it only took 24 hours!).

AND FINALLY...

I sprayed the model black and then painted the base with Goblin Green. The pyramid was then painted with Snakebite Leather followed by Bubonic Brown, then Bleached Bone and finally a light coat of Skull White. The coarse turf was drybrushed with Dark Angels Green, followed by Goblin Green and finally a highlight of Sunburst Yellow. I then varnished the pyramid and let it dry.

So what’s next? I have completed the Terrain Generator table: I now have a piece of terrain for every entry you can roll up. However many of the pieces fill more than one entry - i.e. the ruined temple counts as both a tower and a steep hill. I am now going back over my terrain and I am going to make one piece for each entry on the chart. Should be fun... Maybe I’ll get to tell you all about it in a future White Dwarf.

Well that’s it for now, I hope there is something here to inspire you to build themed terrain for your army. I have certainly learned a lot from my experience. I have played a few games now with my themed scenery and I must say it really brings your games to life. My Lizards are finally defending their realm from the ravages of would-be conquerors (it has also improved my game).

One last thing – the terrain I have built also works extremely well in Warhammer 40,000. I played a game over it last week and the scenery fits perfectly. My Imperial Guard can now battle across mysterious ruins and through dark jungle. I have a complete battlefield for both games... great!

So grab that sticky tape, forage for stones, hoard unwanted packaging, get some PVA and make terrain!
ON DIFFICULT GROUND

I had finally built the hills and my terrain plan was starting to look complete, with only a few more pieces to make. Looking at the Terrain table I decided to make some difficult ground (I had already done the very difficult ground). Now according to the book, difficult ground is scrub, soft sand, a shallow pit, debris, an area of loose rocks or even boulder strewn ground. If I combined a couple of the above elements, making this should be easy. I decided to make the pieces of difficult ground on separate bases so I could easily move regiments through it.

All the pieces of difficult ground had to have rocks and boulders on them, so it was off into the car park for five minutes scrabbling around for suitable stones. These rocks were then glued onto thick card with a hot glue gun (a very handy tool), although two-part epoxy glue will do or even PVA, if you are willing to wait twenty-four hours. I added little pieces of detail to each one and then sprayed them black. When this was dry I painted the bases Goblin Green, and the rocks Snakebite Leather, followed by Bubonic Brown and Bleached Bone to finish. On one piece of difficult ground I drybrushed the rocks grey – which links in with the collapsed temple on my first hill.

QUICK & EASY

I was able to knock out these pieces in less than three hours, which quite surprised me. So I took a quick breather and then plunged head first into making a ruined temple. This would be the very steep hill or the tower entry on the Terrain table. Well that was the plan anyway.

Right: The difficult ground is made out of stones glued onto cardboard. I added smaller coral stones for effect. The entire piece was almost covered with coarse turf. (Quick tip: wash over the coarse turf with watered down PVA. When dry this will give a stiffer surface to drybrush.)

Left: The finished piece. It was painted from a base of black, with Goblin Green on the base and coarse turf. I painted Snakebite Leather onto the rocks, followed by Bubonic Brown and then Bleached Bone.

Right: I got a little more creative with this piece. I added the other half of the Jurassic Park egg, broken into little pieces. This would also be a place of significance for my Lizards, so I added a glyph plate glued to a rock with a Hot Glue Gun (superglue would do the same job). I then filled in the gaps around the glyph with DAS modeling clay. Again I added loads of coarse turf to this piece.

Left: The entire model was painted from a base coat of black. The egg was painted Bleached Bone and then highlighted white. For a shiny eggshell appearance I brushed gloss varnish over the area of the broken egg. With this done, the egg was finished off with a coat of watered down PVA to add extra durability to the model.
contemplating 'the meaning of time and the mysteries of the universe'.

There really is no hiding place on the battlefield. If you put the Slann with a unit, because it is a large target and goes in the front rank, it gets shot at. If you leave it on its own, some airborne nasty drops out of the sky and starts beating it up. What makes the situation worse is that the Slann general will probably be providing most of the magical support for the army. The loss of the model will cost the owning commander much more than just the victory points that are given away.

The most obvious way to ease the situation is to load up your Slann with protective magical devices such as a Jade Amulet, an Amber Amulet and my favorite, the Amulet of Xepati.

The second way is to go for a fatter and more unconscious Slann. The level one Mage-Priest is a complete weed and should only be considered when you have very few points to spend. For any army of two thousand points or more, a Master Mage should be chosen. He may cost one hundred and eighty-five extra points but a Master Mage-Priest is much harder to kill than a Mage-Priest Champion. With the extra couple of Wounds and the Toughness increase, it would take a dozen Wood Elf Scouts eight turns, on average, to kill the Master Mage compared to only three turns to nail the Priest Champion.

To prevent the unnecessary deaths of fat toad creatures, my recommendation is that you lead your army with at least a Master Mage.

One final point – painting your Slann pink may not be a good idea. Painting it two hundred watt florescent pink is definitely a bad move. I am convinced that the Slann I faced a few months ago caused me to lose several thousand unsuspecting retina cells and left me with an unwelcome sun tan.

Dressing your Slann in a colour that will draw so much extra, unwanted attention is just asking for trouble. My own Slann is painted a pastel blue, to cause as little offense as possible and no health and safety concerns for my opponents.

ABOUT SKINKS

"Skinks are small, weak and rubbish. Why can't I have some decent archers in this army?"

I can see how this opinion might arise. At first glance the Skink bowman does not endear himself to a Lizardmen commander. His bow has a paltry maximum range of sixteen inches. He has the archery skill of a Goblin, the fighting prowess of a Skaven, worse Leadership than an Orc and is only taller than a Halfling because of the crest on his head. With his pathetic Toughness he could be taken out by a lucky shot from a water pistol.

My opinion? Skinks are fast, brave, scaly, poisonous and cheap.

Deploy them as skirmishers and Skinks can really travel. A couple of twelve inch, double pace moves, and suddenly having only a sixteen inch range seems far less of a problem. Fast little Skinks.

Apart from during Tortoise/Hare head-to-head marathons, being slow of thought and deed has never seemed like much of an advantage. But the extra dice Skinks get as a result of being slow to react means that although they have a Leadership rating of six, they pass Panic tests almost as well as normal (two dice) troops with a Leadership of eight. Brave little Skinks.

The Slann caused me to lose several thousand unsuspecting retina cells and left me with an unwelcome sun tan.

I really appreciate the fact that they have scaly skin. This skin gives them an unmodifiable six to save. You can drop an office block on a Skink and he will still save on a six. Scaly little Skinks.

It makes pruning a finger terminal, but I always give my Skinks poison arrows. With an increased Strength of four, the combination of a better chance of wounding and a reduced saving throw really boosts the effectiveness of a Skink's firepower. Well worth an extra half a point. Poisonous little Skinks.

So how much does a fully tooled up, fast moving, valiant little lizard cost? A mere six points. That's the same cost as an unarmored human with a spear. I know which I would rather have. Cheap little Skinks.

Okay so maybe now you are thinking that Skinks are WARHAMMER

FIGHTING WITH COLD BLOOD

By Mike Walker

A regular contributor to White Dwarf, Mike Walker is a veteran Warhammer player, and has fought with and against Lizardmen armies dozens of times. This month he shares his thoughts on using the scaly ones.

Unusually I find myself in a situation where I have plenty of time in which to write this article. So allow me to spend a few paragraphs giving you some background on how I came to start it.

Now that a few items written by me have appeared in White Dwarf, local players who know me have started asking me for advice. Fortunately most of the queries have been about Warhammer and only a few have concerned weightier matters like which Lethal Weapon film had the highest body count, if all the members of Steps would fit into little Dave’s shed or who would win if Scooby Doo took on Bagpuss.

As far as the Warhammer questions go I always try to help. Few enough people are interested in what I think, so when someone wants an opinion I provide one. My advice may not solve or even ease their problem, but I enjoy every opportunity to pontificate at length on my favorite hobby.

Lizardmen armies are both difficult to beat and difficult to use.

Some weeks ago White Dwarf Slann’s Paul Sawyer contacted me and asked if I would like to do an item on Lizardmen for this White Dwarf.

After thinking about it in the bath for a bit, I realized that a large proportion of the questions I had been asked recently concerned the cold-blooded ones. Which is a bit odd really, as I have found them to be one of the toughest of the current Warhammer armies. Just as my skin began to take on a Saurus-like texture, something really profound eased its way into my consciousness.

Lizardmen armies are both difficult to beat and difficult to use. So in the next few pages you will find my ruminations on a few of the more interesting problems concerning the creatures from Lustria that I have discussed with local Warhammer players.

My own experience with Lizardmen consists mainly of getting beaten up by the different incarnations of Alan’s scaly ones. I also have my own two thousand point hoard of pool-born and have been known to unleash them upon unsuspecting opponents when it is humid enough.

THE MAGE-PRIEST

“My general, the fat, pink lump, always seems to get shot to bits by Elven archers. What can I do?”

The flippant answer here would be “stop fighting Wood Elves”. However, this question highlights a very real problem confronting each Lizardmen commander – how to keep his Slann general alive.

So let me get this straight. The Slann, ‘second only to the Old Ones in wisdom and understanding’ decided that the best method of maneuvering themselves around a battlefield was to be carried shoulder high on a large, bone chair, adorned with brightly colored totems – not only inviting every bolt thrower and Elven archer on the battlefield to take a shot, but also creating a large target to make those shots a bit easier. All that is missing is a sign reading “shoot here for big victory points” nailed to the Slann’s forehead. I suppose common sense is not required amongst those who spend most of their time

1 It is assumed that during the confrontation Scooby snacks are not available and Bagpuss is awake.
2 Slann: a fat and almost omnipotent, toad-like being, controlling a number of obedient, yet slow-witted minions.
3 I do all my best thinking in the bath. Norman, my yellow, plastic duck, is great for bouncing ideas off, as well as accurately thrown soap missiles.
4 Most spectacularly in a recent league battle when every unit in my Goblin army was routed by the completion of turn one. Whether this is an indication of the nastiness of a Lizardmen army or the foolishness of fielding a Goblin army without the Crown of Command remains a topic of debate amongst the league’s players.
5 Alan’s play can be a bit slow. He would argue his playing technique is deliberate and careful, mimicking the troops in his army. My advice is – when playing Alan, bring sandwiches.
the battlefield, either peppering opponents with poisoned projectiles or charging and causing chaos with deadly dive-bombing. No lone magic user, organ gun or out of control Goblin Fanatic is safe. The very nasty, laser-guided dropped rock attack and three other attacks per model, means that these creatures can take on quite tough opposition. Used against well selected targets, the Terradons can do significant damage to support units and war engines.

However they must be used carefully as they can be a bit fragile. They must avoid getting charged, fighting large units and try not to get seriously shot at. The Terradons, like the Cold Ones, suffer from their riders having the Toughness of a paper hanky.

For two hundred points of versatile and useful troops get the Terradons.

MAGIC AGAIN

“If I can just go back to my earlier question – why is it always, always High Magic?”

High Magic. Pure, noble and powerful.

This just about summarizes the two sets of cards. For example compare these two spells:

Fiery Convocation is not just the best High Magic spell, but may also be the best spell in the entire game. If successfully cast, it does an average of seven Strength four hits now and seven Strength five hits on the same unit in the next magic phase. There is no saving throw allowed and it remains in play, becoming more and more dangerous until dispelled – that’s a lot of charcoal for two power cards.

The Battle Magic spell Destruction does an average of seven strength four hits for two power cards. Not too shabby, but it is just not in the same class as the Fiery Convocation.

Before you stands a proud and virtuous Grail Knight. He has beneath his seat a stout warhorse to carry him into battle and on his heels he has golden spurs to guide the mighty beast. He has on his chest a plate of metal with his fine family’s emblem and has on his head a silver helm, bearing the potent symbols of the Grail. He has in his left hand a strong shield to deflect the blows of his enemies and in his right, to fight them with, he wields a rolled up newspaper.

Equipping your Slann with Battle Magic instead of High Magic is rather like that. You have given him almost, but not quite, everything he needs.

Blast, Move Unit, Net and Hold Fast do their best to offer some impressive Battle Magic, but the real quality remains in the High Magic deck.

Hills will stroll about the battlefield at your whim when you employ the High Magic Assault of Stone spell. Ininitely powerful Daemons and immortal Undead will dissolve into black puddles of steaming Bovril when you bring them into contact with the High Magic Banishment spell. The enemy’s units are frozen in place, great airborne beasts are hurled groundwards and war machines are literally blown away by the High Magic Tempest spell.

Along with the three potent spells I have just exaggerated, the unmatched Fiery Convocation and the excellent Hand of Glory mean that High Magic has no equal. The advantage of an extra dealt card to chose from settles matters.

If you still have a hankering to dabble with Battle Magic, get a couple of Skink Shamans.

Well that’s about it. I can see the excess Winds of Magic cards being replaced.

The Lizardmen are one of the best armies around, I pity those that like me face them regularly. I hope these musings have been of interest and...

Sorry, but I’ve got to stop now; Alan has finally finished his turn and it’s my go.

8 Actually, if the knight was equipped with the Sunday Times (with a full set of supplements) it could prove to be quite an effective weapon to drop on opponents.

9 Having tasted the stuff, I am convinced this is how it is made.
really quite good. Well let me introduce a creature that makes them brilliant. The Skinks hulking older brother, the Kroxigor.

Skinks and Kroxigors are allowed to cohabit in a mixed unit. This unit benefits by using the Kroxigor’s Leadership of nine for all Psychology tests. In combat not only do all the Skinks in the front rank fight – the Kroxigors behind them can also contribute to the carnage with their heavy axes. When calculating the combat result of the unit, the full rank bonus of the very numerous Skinks is counted and the unit benefits from the low cost Skink Standard Bearer and Musicians.

The only drawback is that because Kroxigors are clumsy, blundering and walnut brained, the unit cannot skirmish.

That aside, the combined unit both shoots and fights very effectively. The nine Leadership gives you some very resilient troops. It really doesn’t get any better than this. Brilliant little Skinks.

They are the elite of the army. They carry nasty Strength enhancing halberds. They wear neat helmets made from Stegadon skulls. Equipped with armor and shields, they get an excellent saving throw of three. Oh and Temple Guards are flippin’ expensive.

If you pay the extra three points for the armor and shield, issue them with a nice magical banner (Standard of Shielding, Jaguar Standard and War Banner are all cheap and recommended) and get enough of them to count a maximum rank bonus, you get a unit that is very nasty. You will not get that for two hundred points.

I really like these figures and they always form part of my three thousand point army. In small numbers however they are not effective – two hundred points can be better spent.

On Cold One Riders.

These are my favorite Lizardmen troops. I love being able to set this lizard on lizard combination onto the enemy skirmishers, to send them charging them into the opposition’s cavalry and to smash them into the flank of my opponent’s major combat units. For two hundred points you get a unit of eight fast moving, fear causing and dangerous models.

Great Crested Skinks are no more proficient in combat than Skinks with lesser head adornments. They are a bit stronger though, and contribute to the three Strength four attacks generated each round by each model. Working on the more-dice-the-better theory, these guys out-roll most other cavalry.

Unfortunately their save of three does not stop missile troops devastating them, because of their pitiful Toughness. If your opponent’s army is brim-full of ranged weapons you may not want to use these guys.

They also have a slight reliability problem. The unit suffers Stupidity until you can find some enemy for the Cold Ones to munch on. Their role as fast moving strike troops will often take them to distant parts of the battlefield where even with three dice, the Skink Leadership rating is just too low to overcome the Stupidity regularly enough.

My two hundred points would be spent as follows. Cold One Riders are cheap, but effective cavalry. However because of their weakness against ranged weapons and their habit of going stupid at critical moments, I find that I must recommend you spend the two hundred points on the Terradons.

I may have mentioned earlier in this article that I really like Skink archers. For two hundred points you can get ten of them, mounted in pairs on five giant, flying reptiles. For a few extra points you can give the Skinks poisoned arrows and shields. Might I suggest you do both?7

The Terradon unit is able to strike at any part of 6 Obviously it is a bit awkward to extract the skull bone from an unweilding adult Stegadon. The bones used by the Temple Guard seem to have come from much less dangerous baby Stegadons.

7 If parachutes were an option I would recommend them too.
TICHI-HUICHI'S RAIDERS
SKINK COLD ONE RIDERS

Sculpted by Alan Perry & Trish Morrison

Paid off with sacred relics, Tichi-Huichi's Raiders fight for a Night Goblin Warlord.
White Dwarf proudly continues its series of exclusive new Regiments of Renown for hire. The Dogs of War have fought for and against every known (and unknown) race in the Warhammer world. They all fight for one common goal – fame and, most importantly, fortune. This month Nigel Stillman delves through the writings of the ancients and uncovers Tichi-Huichi’s Raiders. This mercenary Skink regiment fights for a very different reason – they are on a sacred mission from the Old Ones themselves!

DOGS OF WAR
Dogs of War do not necessarily have ties to a particular country, nor are they a whole new race. They are bands of warriors and adventurers who live by fighting – for glory and more importantly for gold! The Dogs of War are made up of skilled pikemen, deadly marksmen, Hobgoblin cavalry from the eastern steppes, Halfling scouts, drunken Dwarf pirates, Ogres from the Badlands and Giants from the misty shores of Albion.

Together they ply their trade to every point of the compass in the Old and New Worlds, fighting for anybody, anytime, anywhere...

Although the Dogs of War regiments have no common heritage, many find employment in that most notorious of mercenary breeding grounds, the land of Tilea. Tilea is an anarchic land and is in an almost constant state of upheaval, as the wealthy merchant princes of the independent city states plot against each other. All this anarchy means mercenaries who travel there can be assured of profitable employment.

REGIMENTS OF RENOWN
Dogs of War Regiments of Renown can be incorporated into your existing Warhammer armies very easily. Just add the regiment’s points cost to the allies allocation of your army list.

All Regiments of Renown have a unique character, so you can only use one of each regiment in your army. Also, each regiment is only available to hire for a limited selection of armies as, for example, some of the Tilean regiments will understandably not fight alongside Skaven, and Dwarfs would never hire Hobgoblins (no matter how good the rates).

Instead of hiring individual regiments, you can raise an entire Dogs of War army. All you need is a Mercenary General to lead it and a Paymaster to pay it. Paymasters are perhaps the most important figures in Dogs of War armies, acting as the Army Standard Bearer. Whenever the army looks like it’s waverin in the face of the enemy, they lift the lid of the pay chest and promise large bonuses, making the army fight on with a steely determination.

IN THE HIRING HALL
The Dogs of War armies book contains fifteen of the most famous Regiments of Renown for hire, and in White Dwarf we have detailed Lumpin Crook’s Fighting Cocks (WD230), Ghazak Khan – Mercenary General (WD231), Oghul Khan’s Hobgoblin Wolfboyt (again WD231) and of course Tichi-Huichi’s Raiders (this issue). Of course the regiments detailed so far are only the tip of the iceberg. There are still many more famous mercenary regiments and characters scattered around the Old World.

Next issue we bring you the Giants of Albion. Coming up over the next few months we also have the rules for Mercenary Generals from other races and more Dogs of War special characters. But this month we deal with Tichi-Huichi’s Raiders...

THE GIANTS OF ALBION
& Hengus the Druid
Sculpted by Iain Morrison
Now Tichi-Huichi knew his mission and the purpose of the spawning. His destiny was clear. It was he who had been chosen to go out into the wider regions to find and bring back the relics which the Old Ones had revealed to him. Following his instinct and allowing the thoughts of those greater than himself to direct his plans, Tichi-Huichi set out, leading his fine regiment of Cold One Riders. They had not been idle during the monsoon. They had mastered the techniques of riding and fighting from Cold Ones. It had come upon them as if by instinct. Instruction had hardly been necessary.

On encountering the first settlement of ‘new ones’, who happened to be a nomadic tribe of Arabians, Tichi-Huichi remained enigmatic, seeking only to follow the current of events unfolding before him by the will of the gods. The Arabian chief, awe-struck at the sight of real Al Saurim before his very eyes, seemed eager to hire Tichi-Huichi’s regiment. Many treasures were cast upon the sand before him, but he merely blinked his yellow eyes at their brightness in the glare of the sun. Then he caught sight of a sacred talisman which he had seen in his dreams and let out a rasping croak of delight. The sheikh laughed and gave it to Tichi-Huichi. A deal had been struck. The regiment rode with the Arabians on many raids into the land of Nechkhara. Tombs were pillaged in the outlying necropolises of that desolate land. Treasures were scattered upon the sands. Then came the day when Skeleton warriors rose up on all sides and slew the Arabians to the last man. But Tichi-Huichi’s Riders fought them to a standstill in the scorching sun. Then the Liche Priest raised his staff and stayed the Skeleton warriors. He brought out a bundle of rags and unwrapped the object concealed within. Tichi-Huichi saw the sacred plaque of his second dream. Tichi-Huichi signalled for the standard to be dipped. The priest understood. The quarrel was ended and instead, Tichi-Huichi was recruited into the army of the Tomb King, who sat enthroned within his pyramid and seemed to be animated with an inspired thought, as if from afar. There followed years of fighting along the northern margins of the desert. Dwarfs were the quarry. They were easily pursued and caught as they vainly tried to escape, laden down with plunder.

One day, Tichi-Huichi pursued for several days and ventured too far. The Dwarfs were standing ready to die, and there was an uneasy pause before the last charge. Then Tichi-Huichi saw a statue of the monkey god peeping out of the rucksack of a Dwarf. A well aimed dart struck the strap, and the bag fell open. The golden statue tumbled out. As the Dwarf struggled to gather up his ill-gotten loot, his lord’s hefty, hob-nailed boot imprinted itself upon his rear behind: “Leave it, Grongl!” he snarled. “It’s our only chance, lad!” The Dwarfs edged back and Tichi-Huichi signalled forward a Skink to recover the sacred statue; the one revealed in his third dream. The Dwarfs warily turned and began to march away, shadowed at a discreet distance by the Skink Cold One Riders.

So it went on to this day. Tichi-Huichi was hired by the Dwarf Lord of Barak-Varr, in a strange meeting in which the Dwarf Lord believed he was advised to hire the Skinks by a long-dead ancestor. Even so, the bargaining had been long, but three gold plaques had done the trick better than a massive chest of gems. Strange creatures these Lizardmen, thought the Dwarfs, but great value for money! And so a Dwarf would think! One who was accustomed to valuing gold by its weight alone; a creature ignorant of the intentions of gods; one for whom sacred plaques are just so much metal to be melted down! Did they not know that the Old Ones wrote on gold only because gold is imperishable!

And so Tichi-Huichi’s Raiders fought against Orcs and Goblins. Then they were hired by them in their turn, serving Goblin chiefs who were convinced that Mork or Gork or both had inspired them. They fought battles and regained many more lost relics. With every change of fortune, a sacred artefact appeared. Though the masters he served might flee or be wiped out utterly, strangely Tichi-Huichi’s Raiders were still there at the end of every battle. Mysteriously their foes always saw the wisdom of hiring them, and the futility of a fight in which the Skinks would slaughter many before dying themselves. Without knowing a word of mannish or Orcish or Khazadil or Elven tongue, a deal was always struck. Were the thoughts of their foes directed by some greater mind, enthroned upon a pyramid temple in Zlatan perhaps? Incrutable are the ways of the Old Ones!

THE REGIMENT

Captain: Tichi-Huichi.

Motto: Cold-blooded efficiency.

Battle-cry: “Tupyn tzlaga anapaq quito grizliz” (rough translation: get out of the way because the Cold Ones are thirsty!).

Appearance: Tichi-Huichi is a vermillion Skink, marked out for greatness by the sun god Chotek. He also has a high crest denoting empathy with Cold Ones. All the Cold Ones are black with vermillion spots or streaks, and all the Great Crested Skink riders are green with vermillion crests. These are the markings sought after by Tichi-Huichi.

For Hire: Any Warhammer army except Skaven and Dark Elves can hire Tichi-Huichi’s Riders.

Points: Tichi-Huichi and four Skink Cold One Riders including a standard bearer and musician cost 215 points. This is the minimum unit you can hire. The regiment may be increased by adding more Skink Cold One Riders at 25 points each.

SPECIAL RULES

Cold-Blooded: Skinks are cold-blooded and slow to react to psychology. Roll three dice when testing against Leadership and choose the two lowest scores.

Cold Ones: Cold Ones cause fear, are subject to stupidity, and give their riders +2 to their armor saves in place of the usual +1 for mounted troops.

Blessed by the Old Ones: Tichi-Huichi and his Skink Cold One Riders enjoy the special favor of the Old Ones. They belong to a portentous spawning, brought forth for a mission devised untold millennia ago, and consequently a mysterious aura of protection pervades the regiment. To represent this, hand-to-hand opponents will never pursue Tichi-Huichi’s Raiders if they beat them in combat. A strange, tropical fatigue descends on the foe, securing Tichi-Huichi’s chance to get away and live to fight another day.

By Grungi! Great value for money, these Lizards. They fight for only a couple of mere strips of gold!

Dwarf Lord Borik, on hiring Tichi-Huichi’s Raiders.

On the five-thousandth cycle of the sun, at the equinox of Topec, on the meridian of the Serpent Star, a spawning occurred in the sacred pools of the ruined temple of Enxilada. All sacred plaques which might have predicted this spawning had long since been destroyed. The temple was remote from the great city of Zlatan in the south-lands and had been abandoned for a long time. No Slann Mage-Priests had turned their minds in this direction for many years and the spawning occurred unnoticed. Indeed it was a sporadic spawning, evoked purely by the unusual portents and astral conjunctions. It was perhaps the mysterious will of Soteck at work.

Only one mature Lizardman was there to witness the spawning. It was Tichi-Huichi. He it was who watched over the ruined temple and chanted the salute to the sun as it rose every day. He was the last inhabitant of Enxilada, all others having perished years ago from a mysterious pestilence.

Tichi-Huichi saw that the markings upon the Skink spawn in the sacred pools was good. They were indeed favored by the gods. He felt somehow privileged and chosen for such a thing to occur in his time. He watched as the tadpoles reached maturity and came out upon the land to bask. He could see that they were of the greater crested kind, the sort who could master the Cold Ones. This thought gripped the mind of Tichi-Huichi and he went to look in the dark caverns deep below the ruins. His expectations were correct and a symbiotic spawning had occurred here as well. The eggs had hatched and the tiny Cold Ones bore similar markings to the Skinks. It was certainly the will of the Old Ones that these spawnings should occur at the same time.

A few years later Tichi-Huichi had trained the rising generation of Skinks in all the lore of Enxilada that he knew. They looked upon him as their mentor and leader. Over the same time the Cold Ones had grown to full size and already the Skinks were taming and riding them. It happened almost naturally, the empathy between the species was preordained. One became master to the other. It was at this moment that the mind of a Slann Mage-Priest in far away Zlatan focused upon Enxilada. Profound thoughts were evoked within the alert mind of Tichi-Huichi. Now his purpose became clear. His duty to the Old Ones was to lead the chosen regiment which had been spawned by their will. It was the season of monsoon. In the fetid, steamy nights that followed, Tichi-Huichi was troubled by dreams. He perceived far away places, and strange races and creatures. In their midst he became aware of the presence of great treasures—potent talismans of the Old Ones, things which had been looted from Enxilada and other places, sacred artefacts which the Old Ones desired him to bring back.

NEW LOCATION

OPENING SOON!
At Games Workshop Hobby Centers there is always a helpful staff member ready to assist you with whatever you need. Games Workshop staff are committed hobbyists who are more than happy to give you painting tips, army-building advice, and if you've never tried out one of our games before, they would be more than happy to introduce you to a demonstration game. If it has to do with the hobby, our well-trained staff members know just what the answer is.

Each store also hosts Veterans' Nights for all experienced hobbyists. If you have a fully painted Warhammer of Warhammer 40,000 army, you can bring in your troops and test your mettle as a general either against a friend or challenge a staff member to a battle. Call your nearest Games Workshop store to find out when their Veterans' Nights are and what battle is being hosted.

PAINTING AND SCENERY LESSONS

Each Games Workshop staff member is an experienced hobbyist and can help you improve in whatever area you need. Just bought your first Citadel Miniature and don't know where to begin? Our Hobby Centers offer free painting lessons to help you get involved right away in this exciting hobby. Or perhaps you have been painting for years, but you still have a nagging question about how to design banners or paint realistic-looking highlights, just ask a staff member for a lesson.

However, no tabletop battlefield is complete without some incredible-looking scenery. Our staff can also teach you anything from building simple rock crags to fantastic buildings. Be sure to check in with your nearest Hobby Center as there is always an event designed to teach, improve, and help you have fun in this dynamic and expansive hobby!

Burn the retro-rockets and enter the atmosphere of your nearest Games Workshop Hobby Center for all your hobby needs and exciting battles on Veteran's Nights!
Imagine the fun you can have bashing heads in this Blood Bowl stadium! If this isn't one of the coolest things you've ever seen you need a check up! Join in the Blood Bowl leagues that are run all the time at Games & Gizmos and let your team play on this spectacular field!

Of course, Games & Gizmos carries everything Games Workshop makes. You can start a new army or finish the one you've been working on. Everything you need from blisters and boxed sets to paints and modeling supplies can be found here!

As if all this wasn't enough they even hold special painting workshops once a week. This way you can get your army into top shape in no time. To help you with gaming at home, they hold a terrain making workshop once a month. Plus, you can come in any day of the week and paint and convert your models and get advice from a slew of veteran gamers and painters!

There are stores where you can go and game, and then there are store where you can go and get immersed in the hobby. Games and Gizmos in Washington is definitely one of those stores where you can go and lose yourself in the Warhammer or Warhammer 40,000 universe! So what exactly do these stores do that make them so great? Read on!

If you live in Washington state, Games and Gizmos is the place to go to get your Games Workshop fix. What’s even better is that there are three stores to choose from!

Every month you can take part in a new Warhammer or Warhammer 40,000 tournament! To the winners go all the bragging rights and the spoils of victory (special prizes!). Even better is that every three months they hold mega-tournaments with huge prizes. In February they gave away tickets to the Games Workshop US Grand Tournaments!!!

Regular gaming is an integral part of Games & Gizmos. Every day you can walk in and get a pick-up game of Warhammer or Warhammer 40,000 and that’s just the beginning!

Every other month you can get into special leagues for Blood Bowl, Necromunda, Epic 40,000, Gorkamorka and more! Don’t forget about Monday night “Campaign Nights” and all their special skirmish games. In addition to all this gaming excitement you can get demos every day of the week so you can start playing all our other great game systems! Where else can you go to find this much gaming?

Kids should check out their “Young Warriors Program”. Here they teach the younger players all tips and strategies of Warhammer and Warhammer 40,000!

I decided to give the power armor a marble effect as this would give the Lord an unusual and different appearance. To research this I looked through back issues of White Dwarf and came across a Warhammer Quest diorama by Mike MoVey which had a nice marble effect in it. I am pleased with the end result although it was a very time consuming process.

The new Chaos Lord and it's mine, all mine! I decided straight away that I wanted this to be a foul Lord of Nurgle. To get the right effect I painted the armor with similarly toned colors and highlighted it normally. After this I went over the armor with extra details like cracks and goo, then glazed it with brown, orange and green inks to make it look nasty. To create the blood on the axe head I started with Scab Red and then built up through the red range, finishing with Blood Red. When this was dry I then applied a red ink wash and finally a gloss varnish.

I undercoated the model with black and then applied the red straight on, gradually building up to Skull White. I then applied red glaze to pull the colors together and give a shiny finish. The metal areas were first painted with dark grey mixed with a little Boltgun Metal. I then made sharp highlights using Mithril Silver, and small areas were then washed with blue to give the armor an ancient feel. By the way I do hate Dark Angels.

This is not as hard as it looks – the cracked effect on the armor was built up by painting thin lines all over and then highlighting these lines instead of following the contours of the armor. Go on give it a go and remember all it takes is practice.

I decided to go for something very different so I chose to paint the model as an Iron Warriors Lord. I started off by drybrushing the model to achieve the distinctive metal armor. The gold detail of the armor was painted with a mixture of Burnished Gold and Tin Bitz, which was then highlighted with gold. The base is an upside down 50mm slotta base covered with plasticard.
THERE CAN BE ONLY ONE

The standards set by our very own figure painters, the 'Eavy Metal team, are rarely bettered, so just imagine how high the painting quality would be if they were competing against each other? Well you don't need to imagine. We set a bit of a competition to coincide with the release of the remarkable, new Chaos Space Marine Lord miniature sculpted by Jes Goodwin.

THE WINNER

There wasn't a complex reason for painting the figure black, other than that no one else decided to. I highlighted the black by adding a small amount of Regal Blue to Skull White and keeping the highlights simple. The axe and armor detail was painted bone to contrast with the black armor plates. The feel of bone on the axe was achieved by base coating the axe head with Scorched Brown, then painting thin lines with Dark Flesh. These lines were then highlighted using using Bubonic Brown, Bleached Bone and then finally Skull White. I think I won because I kept to a limited pallet of colors, used simple techniques and of course bribery.

Went for the traditional approach to painting a Chaos Champion - brass and red! The gloss effect on the armor was achieved by gradually building up the red from a black undercoat, using Scab Red, Red Gore and Blood Red. The effect was finished off by adding loads of red glazes. The stones on the base were made out of textured plasticard. The base was then painted white before picking out the stones with Chaos Black, and then the whole thing was covered with red glaze.

This model is intended to be the start of my new Chaos Space Marine army. I painted the armor with a base coat of Regal Blue, then highlighted this using Enchanted and Lightning Blue. The axe has an obsidian paint effect which was inspired by Matt Parkes' paint job for the Imperial Missionary. To gain this effect I first painted thin lines on the axe using Jade Green, then highlighted them with Skull White.

The only reason I painted the model purple was because I had not used the color for a long time! I painted the armor plates with Liche Purple, highlighted this with Tentacle Pink and finally glazed this down with purple glaze. I enjoyed this project as I got to paint this great new Chaos Space Marine and then keep it when I'd finished!
SPECIAL GUESTS

Every year we see which members of the gang in the UK we can clunk on the head, stuff in a sack, and cart over to make a guest appearance at Games Day. This year our head knockin’ clubs worked overtime and we managed to bag some real winners!

Robin Dews - None other than the head of the Games Workshop Studio himself will be with us. He’s the former editor of White Dwarf and is a longtime studio veteran. We’re sure he’s got plenty of stories in the vault (embarrassing and otherwise) to tell everybody he meets at Games Day!

Brian Nelson - Sculptor extraordinaire, and all around good guy, Brian will be on hand to tell you all about the new greenskin models on the way for Warhammer and Warhammer 40,000, or you can ask about some of the other fabulous models (green or not) that he’s produced for Games Workshop!

Tuomas Pirinen - The main man of Mordheim, Tuomas has been keeping you up to date over the last few issues of White Dwarf with the continuing development of the game of fantasy skirmishes in the City of the Damned! If we twist his arm just right (and we really mean it, we’re gonna twist his arm), he may be gracious enough to run a demo or two of the soon-to-be-released game.

Rick Priestley - The Godfather of game design, you should know Rick from his illustrious career in the Games Workshop Studio. He’s had at least a hand in the creation of every big project Games Workshop has ever produced, and his most recent credits include being the main developer of the new edition of Warhammer 40,000! He may even bring along some of the unreleased Codex books he’s putting the finishing touches on so you can get a sneak peek. If you’re really curious, and know the secret password, you might be able to pry some real top-secret kinda stuff out of him before anyone else!

Brian Nelson hard at work (or hardly working) on some great new miniatures, like the Orks (the the bits below) he’ll be showing off at Games Day!

GAMING SESSIONS & TIME SLOTS

GAMING FOR EVERYONE!

With the different types of gaming available, everybody should be able to get in on the action!

DEMONSTRATION GAMES

If you’re looking to give a new game a try, or maybe introduce a friend to the hobby, there’s no better place to do it than the Demonstration Tables at Games Day! All the models, scenery, and instructions are provided, all we need is you!

REGISTERED GAMES

Most of the tables at Games Day are set up for Registered Games with Gaming Session Time Slots (see the chart). All the models and terrain are provided. To be safe, it’s advised that you register in advance when getting your ticket through Mail Order (see the ticket information), but we’ll be more than happy to register people for games at the door in Baltimore.

BRING & BATTLE GAMES

If you’d like to pit your own models against the world, then the Bring & Battle Games are for you! With scenery and scenarios all set, you can step in when there’s an opening without having to register. Be sure to check the points, list restrictions, and other rules for each table before gathering your troops.

MEGA-BATTLES

The Mega-Battle tables give players a chance to take part in a large scale battle with a special scenario and holding, in some cases, up to six players on each side. You must have your own models (check the game description for points and restrictions) and you MUST BE REGISTERED to play in the Mega-Battles.

SPECIAL GAMING EVENTS

This year, in addition to the multitude of gaming tables available above, we’ve added two very special, unique events to our lineup. The Friday only event, “The Mutating Scourge of Fabius Bie,” will be your chance to participate in what could be the biggest game of Warhammer 40,000 ever played, anywhere! Then there’s our preview of this year’s much anticipated Battle Tour, “The Hunt for the Fallen,” where everybody at Games Day will get a chance to try out the scenario before it hits a store near you! Find the descriptions of these two monster events elsewhere in this article for all the details!
Every year, thousands of crazed gamers from all over the world descend upon downtown Baltimore, Maryland to wreak unspeakable amounts of havoc on fantastic battlefields, commanding armies of bloodthirsty soldiers. No, it's not some sort of revolutionary uprising, or political unrest in the Charm City, it's the one and only Games Day, and it's just around the corner! This year, with new games, new tables, and a few surprises, it promises to be bigger and better than ever!

GAMES DAY, WHAT'S IT ALL ABOUT?

Games Day is the marquee event marked on each and every Games Workshop hobbyist's calendar. It's a yearly, two day celebration of all things Games Workshop. There's tons of different kinds of gaming events with enthusiasts from all over, demos of new games, new release previews, and a collection of some of the best painters anywhere in the annual Golden Demon Painting Competition. On top of that we've got UK Studio guests and a surprise or two. All of this adds up to a frenzied weekend of maniacal gaming, as well as a chance to meet new and interesting people involved in the same hobby as you are, then stomp 'em on the battlefield. Over the next few pages you'll find all the information you need to get ready for Games Day. Whether it's your first time attending or you're a seasoned Games Day veteran, this year is gearing up to be the best yet!

GOLDEN DEMON

PAINTING COMPETITION 1999

The Golden Demon Painting Competition is a yearly showcase of some of the best painting talent from all over North America joined in heated competition for the crown of overall champion and the right to hoist the enormous Golden Demon Slayer Sword. Categories range from single models to intricate and massive battle scenes (the complete listing can be found later in this article along with entry information) and each year they only get better. If you're thinking about entering, get cracking! Entries must be submitted on Saturday the 10th, with the awards ceremony taking place between 4:30 and 5:00 that afternoon. Even if you're not entering, make it a point to check out the entries. It's not every day you get to peruse table after table of beautifully painted Citadel Miniatures. This is truly the best place to get a good look at one of the finer arts of the hobby.
GAMING GALORE!

Over the years, Games Day has grown and expanded with new experiences and events each year. With all the excitement of special guests, previews of new releases, and meeting gamers from all over North America (and elsewhere) who have made their way to witness the spectacle first hand, it can be hard to keep track. But honestly, it wouldn’t be Games Day without the games! The focus still remains on the tables, where battles are won or lost and friends are made all weekend long in the boisterous hall. Here’s the complete listing of all the games you can take a shot at during Games Day 1999!

RUNTHERRD PASSES

Parents coming with their kids to Games Day who have no interest in gaming, but still want to keep an eye on their kids can get a FREE Runtherd Pass! It gives admission for both days and a reservation at the "Runtherd Inn," a quiet place to escape the din of the gaming floor.

GAME REGISTRATION AND YOU...

You might be wondering, "What is all this talk about registration?" Well, in order to make sure everybody has ample chance to get some gaming in, we have designated tables that you must register to play on. This ensures that you'll have a spot on the table you want to play and it takes a bit of the hassle out of Games Day. Pre-registration allows you to get dibs on the tables you want, at the times you want, when you first order your ticket from Mail Order (tables do fill up, so make sure you have alternate choices handy). But even if you don't pre-register, there's still plenty of opportunity to get into a game. There will be registration at the door in Baltimore, and there are numerous unregistered games you can play (Bring & Battles, Mini-Games, etc.). There's enough games to go around that everybody we fit through the door can play till their heart's content.

JOHNNY Q. GAMER'S GAMES DAY LOG

I called Games Workshop Mail Order months in advance to make sure that I got to play on the tables I really wanted to, but I had my alternates handy in case my first choices were full. Then I got all the models together that I needed for the Bring & Battle Games, and I put the finishing touches on my Golden Demon entries.

I arrived before the hall was open Friday afternoon with my ticket in hand and my troops in a case so I could be one of the first ones in and see all of the great new stuff waiting behind the doors. I could really tell that the crowd was excited!

I wasn't signed up for any games until Gaming Session #3 on Friday, so I tried my hand at Speed Painting, and then checked out "The Hunt for the Fallen." I can't wait 'til it's in my town!

At 4:30 I got ready to play in my session. I chose to play on the Skaven tunnel table I saw in White Dwarf. The Helbasher I was using rallied off 24 shots and totally eliminated a group of rat swarms. The Empire ended up taking the castle from the vermin.

After my game I decide to see what all the hoopla was about around the gigantic Warhammer 40,000 event. I came up to the table with my two squads of Space Marines and managed to grab three barrels of munition before we were blown up by a great shot from an enemy missile launcher. I turned in my barrels and got some really great stuff. I'm glad I got on that table!

It was about time for Friday to come to an end, so I took a little walking tour of the hall to look at some of the other gaming tables and talked to the guests from the UK. I told Robin Dews some of my ideas for new game rules and he muttered something about "punts" - weird.

After they closed the doors to the hall, some other gamers and myself sat in the lobby discussing the finer points of Orky culture and decided that we should all get in on a Bring & Battle the next day.

I arrived at about 9:45 on Saturday morning with my finished Golden Demon entries and all the paperwork filled out so I could enter with no problems. There was no way I was letting my hard work go to waste by missing the noon deadline!

My game in session #2 was about to start so I got to the table in plenty of time to see the battle before mine wrap up.

I took the role of an Ultramarine Tactical Squad against some really mean looking Dark Eldar on the "Glacier Table." The guy running the game said it was the same table that one of the Games Workshop Staff League Finals games was played on. That's pretty cool!

I checked on the first cut for my Golden Demon entries. All three of them made the top 10 in their categories! I felt pretty proud of myself after all the effort I put into them.

I met up with my Bring & Battle buddies from the night before and we took a shot at the "Khârâne's Khârmage" table. The two squads I used in the 40K event didn't last as long as the night before. Raptors swooped down and picked them apart from the blind side before I knew what hit 'em.

After the Bring & Battle, I grabbed some lunch in the lobby and lamented my ill fate with someone else who suffered the same defeat.

Once I finished my lunch, I headed in to see the winners for Golden Demon and held my breath. I couldn't believe it. I got first place in one category and third in another!

I ventured into the Sales area and checked out some of the new products that were for sale at Games Day before anywhere else.

Then I checked out some of the Mini-Games I read about. I scored in the Blood Bowl Challenge, tried out Mordheim (Tuomas was busy at the UK guests table), and got my head knolked at the Mail Order Trollslayers table!

I waited for the awards ceremony to get my Golden Demon statue. When I went on stage, everybody cheered, it was really great. Some guy with a Wood Elf conversion won the Slayer Sword and got a huge round of applause.

After two whole days of gaming madness, I was beat. I had the best time ever at Games Day 1999 and can't wait until next year!
REGISTERED GAMES - These tables have all the scenery and miniatures ready to play on them, you must register for these tables.

Table #1 - The Black Ark - High Elves vs. Dark Elves
A Black Ark of Naggaroth and its deadly inhabitants launch an attack on a High Elf tower lying on the shores of the Shadowlands.

Table #2 - Rally Round the Herdstone - Wood Elves vs. Beastmen
The sounds of battle echo through the glades as the Wood Elves try to drive the Beastmen from the forests of Athel Loren before they can establish a stronghold and further encroach on the realm.

Table #3 - Blood on the Vines - High Elves vs. Dogs of War
A Tilean merchant and his mercenary company have discovered an ancient High Elf heuristion in an old ruin outside of town. All of the offers from the Elves to purchase it have been refused, and now they have no choice but to take back their property by force.

Table #4 - Circle of Stone - Lizardmen vs. Bretonnians
A Bretonnian warhost defends their honorable ground to the death against scaly, cold-blooded invaders.

Table #5 - Mousillon - Bretonnians vs. Chaos
King Louis has declared an Enraged War to cleanse the Chaos infestation of Mousillon. Many Knights have answered the call, but will they succeed.

Table #6 - Vampire Counts - Undead vs. The Empire
Grand Theogonist Vollmar leads a mighty Imperial force on a mission to destroy an emerging Vampire Count in Sylvania. Watch your necks!

Table #7 - Is That a Light? - Skaven vs. The Empire
(See White Dwarf #220 for more info on this table)
A Skaven Warband has overrun an Imperial border fortress from beneath and within, only the Emperor’s finest can reclaim it.

Table #8 - Battle in Vein - Dwarfs vs. Orcs and Goblins Dwarven Miners defend their precious gold mine from a massive Greenskin hoard. Nothing comes between a Dwarf and his gold!

Table #9 - Last Stand for the Empire - Chaos Daemons vs. The Empire
An Imperial force is being overrun by Chaos Daemons and someone has to make it through the battle lines to get word to the rest of the Empire!

Table #10 - 20,000 Beards Under the Sea - Dwarfs vs. Chaos Marauders
Chaos Marauders with their Longships have been the terror of the Northern Seas for far too long and the Dwarf Kings have had enough! They’ve sent a massive fleet carrying an entire Dwarf army to the shores of the Sea of Claws to destroy a Marauder hideout.

Table #11 - Halls of the Mountain King - Skaven vs. Orcs and Goblins
Skaven and Greenskin Warlords clash deep beneath the World’s Edge Mountains for control of the Dwarf stronghold of Karak Eight Peaks.

Table #12 - The Mosquito Coast - Undead vs. Lizardmen
Vampire Lord Luther Harcken has been shipwrecked on the Lizardian coast. To make the most of his misfortune, he’s been raiding some of the lost Lizardmen temples deep in the jungle. The Slann Mage-Priests have ordered their followers to go retrieve their precious items, and destroy the defiler of the sacred temples.

BRING & BATTLE TABLES - Bring your own troops and have a go at these scenarios. The troop requirements (points, restrictions, etc.) are listed with each mission. You do not have to register to play on these tables, simply show up with your own models and go at it!

Table #1 - Plunder, Plunder, Plunder! - Lizardmen vs. ?
Explorers lost in the jungles of Lutria raid a Lizardman temple in search of bootie, but will soon find that only the wrath of Sotek awaits them within. Bring one unit worth up to 250 points with no flyers or wizards, and no more than 20 points in magic items.

Table #2 - Have Fun Storming the Castle! - The Empire vs. ?
Do you have what it takes to make it over the walls? Join our massive Warhammer Siege event as the Empire defenders take on all comers! Bring one unit worth up to 250 points with no flyers or wizards, and no more than 20 points in magic items.

Table #3 - It’s Not Easy Being Green - Orcs and Goblins vs. ?
Come and battle the massive WAAGGH! You and your allies are out to eradicate every Greenskin in sight or die trying! Bring one unit worth up to 250 points with no flyers or wizards, and no more than 20 points in magic items.

Table #4 - Curse of the Khemri - Tomb Kings of Khemri vs. ?
Treason hunting defilers in the deserts of Khemri have awakened an ancient Tomb King and his Royal Guard. And as usual, they’re more than willing to recruit new members. Bring one unit worth up to 250 points with no flyers or wizards, and no more than 20 points in magic items.

Table #5 - A Marrow Escape - Undead vs. ?
A Necromancer is busy raising the dead in the badlands to form an empire of his own. Can you stop him in time before the horror of Nagash is revisited in a new reign of evil? Bring one unit worth up to 250 points with no flyers or wizards, and no more than 20 points in magic items.

MEGA-BATTLE - This advanced game will pit six players on each side and has an extended time slot. You MUST bring your own Warhammer army up to 1000 points - no flyers or wizards and up to 50 points in magic items.

Mega-Battle - King of the Hill - A Wild, Every-Man-For-Himself Basher
An ancient relic from the golden days of Sigmar has been discovered in a temple on the very outskirts of Strliland. This item is fabled over the centuries to possess all manner of magic powers that can only help any ambitious general towards becoming nothing short of an Emperor in his own right! If you are the last one remaining in the temple at the end of the game, you are the rightful owner of this sacred artifact!
Table #3 - Any Port in a Storm? - Necrons vs.?
Escape pods jettisoned from damaged orbiting Battle Barges and Space Hulks begin to land on the surface of a desert planet. The troubles were thought to be over, until the long-dormant Necrons stormed out of the pyramids. Bring up to 200 points worth of troops and no transports.

Table #4 - Infiltration - Free for All
Space Marines, Eldar, Orky, and Chaos scouting parties meet in a Tyrannid-infested jungle to retrieve a military probe droid that’s been lost among the lush greenery. Bring a 150 point squad of infiltrators or Mandrakes and start the search party!

Table #5 - Deathtrap - Free for All
Your mission (and you must accept it) is to bypass a line of computerized defenses and make your way into a top-secret research facility bunker before anyone else. Bring a 300 point force built using the Standard Missions organization chart.

Table #6 - The Ruins of Brakka Skar - Free For All
The Ork Warlords have been driven away from Brakka Skar and now you have a chance to blow up a partially built Ork Gargant before it can be unleashed. Bring a 300 point force built using the Standard Missions organization chart.

Mega-Battle - This advanced game will carry six players on each side and encompasses an extended time slot. You MUST bring your own troops up to 750 points using the Standard Missions organization chart.

Mega-Battle - Bunker Assault - Complete and Total Anarchy
Your forces have been dispatched to claim a bunker in the middle of a raging battlefield to sway the tide in your army’s favor. Orks, Space Marines, Tyranids, Guardsmen, EVERYONE wants to take advantage of the bunker. Whomever holds the bunker when the game ends wins!

THE MUTATING SCOURGE OF FABIUS BILE

This year at Games Day we decided to do something a little special. Rather than having just games that were either bound by the gaming sessions, or the Mega-Battles with up to six players with entire armies fighting to the death, we decided to set up an event that everyone, and we mean everyone, can be a part of. The event described below is directly from one of the most successful game nights we had during our Staff Warhammer 40,000 League and will give all the players a chance to compete in a game that’s sure to result in a great, noisy bush. It’s so special that it will only take place on Friday afternoon (we won’t be able to withstand two days of the insanity from this event), so make sure that you show up ready to play. Read on to see what it’s all about...

The evil master of mutagenics, Fabius Bile, has perfected his newest strain of serum for creating a new, more powerful breed of Primogen. This information has become one of the worst-kept secrets in the galaxy and the forces of good and evil are descending on his outpost to raid his storage facilities in an attempt to either destroy the barrels, take and use the vile liquid for their own schemes, or merely consume it for the Hive Mind. Bring up to two squads worth up to 300 points total and make a mad dash to grab as much mutagen as you can carry!

This event will carry as many gamers as possible and is set to run all of Friday with players jumping on and off the table in a fast and furious ongoing event. Who knows what rewards the barrels will contain, and what players who are brave enough to retrieve them will receive? This event is sure to draw a large crowd and generate plenty of excitement in the hall. You do not have to register in advance for this event; you do have to have your force as described above and your troops better have their running boots on!

1999 BATTLE TOUR HUNT FOR THE FALLEN

The Dark Angels have embarked on a crusade throughout the entire galaxy to hunt down a select list featuring the most wanted Heretics to the Imperium. Renegade Space Marines, Rogue Psykers, Chaos Cultists, they’re all on the list as the mission to recover the Fallen is initiated at Games Day. You can be among the first to play this year’s Games Workshop Battle Tour Scenario, “The Hunt for the Fallen,” before we take it on the road later this Summer. See if you can capture some of the Imperium’s vilest villains before they can escape Games Day and spread their tainted spirit throughout the galaxy.

WANTED - Recruits for the Dark Angels Crusade to HUNT FOR THE FALLEN
Must be pure of spirit and willing to give their all to spread the undying light of the Emperor to the darkest regions of the universe, as well as recover and purify those traitors, rogues, and heretics deemed most dangerous to our preservation of the one true Imperium.

This is your chance to play the 1999 Battle Tour before it hits the road! We’ll be playing all day. Both days, so everyone will be able to get in on the action. Make sure you stop by and give it a shot!
1. Best Warhammer 40,000 Single Miniature
   This category is open to any Warhammer 40,000 foot or mounted miniature presented on its appropriate slotbase up to 25mm x 50mm in size, which means figures on 25mm round bases, cavalry bases, or flying stands. Models on 40mm x 40mm or larger bases belong in category 6.

2. Best Warhammer 40,000 Squad
   This category is for the best infantry or cavalry squad built within the appropriate race's army list parameters. For example, 5-10 Terminators, 3-5 Dark Reapers with an Exarch, or 5-10 Rough Riders. All models must be presented on standard slotbases of appropriate size and movement trays are highly recommended. Do not include troop transports, these belong in category 3.

3. Best Warhammer 40,000 Vehicle or Squadron
   This category is open to a single large Warhammer 40,000 vehicle, dreadnought, war machine with crew, or a squadron of smaller vehicles. For example, an Imperial Chimera is a large vehicle, an Eldar Wraithlord is a dreadnought, an Ork Big Gun is a war machine, and three to five Space Marine bikes is a squadron. Most vehicle models do not come with a base but you may provide one to enhance stability and appearance.

4. Best Warhammer Single Miniature
   Open to any single Warhammer figure mounted or on foot, presented on either a square base no larger than 25mm, a cavalry base, or a flying stand. Models on 40mm x 40mm monster bases or larger belong in category 6.

5. Best Warhammer Unit
   Entries into this category must consist of a unit of Warhammer miniatures on their appropriate slotbases. Unit entries must include at least three of the following: General or Hero, Unit Champion, Standard Bearer, Musician, or Wizard. The maximum unit size is 20 models and providing a movement tray is highly recommended!

6. Best Monster / Creature or Warhammer War Machine
   This category is open to all Warhammer or Warhammer 40,000 creatures on 40mm x 40mm bases or larger. For Warhammer 40,000 this covers Avatars, Ogres, Tyrannid Warriors, etc. For Warhammer, it includes Orc Wyverns, High Elf Griffons, Trolls, etc. (you get the picture). Monsters may have a rider where appropriate. War machines must include crew as per the relevant Warhammer Armies Book.

7. Best Battlefleet Gothic Fleet
   Entries into this category should consist of 4-10 models organized according to the appropriate fleet list. Adhering your ships to a movement tray with Blu-Tack or some other form of temporary adhesive is highly recommended.

8. Best Battle Scene
   This category is for one or more models set in a scene of extra depth. The figures should be arranged to tell a story. Entries will be judged on painting, conversion work, scene modeling, how well it conveys its narrative ideas, and should adhere to Games Workshop's established imagery. Entries MUST NOT be larger than 12"x12". Otherwise, our Games Day Ogres will have to make sure it fits, and you wouldn't want that, would you?

9. Youngbloods Category
   The Youngbloods competition is open to painting entrants 14 years old or younger. Your entry should consist of any single Citadel miniature from any Games Workshop game on its appropriate gaming slotbase.

10. The Slaves to Darkness
    Entries in this category must consist of one Warhammer or Warhammer 40,000 Chaos figure mounted or on foot, a Warhammer Chaos chariot or creature, a Warhammer 40,000 vehicle or dreadnought, or any single Daemon or Daemon Prince. Models will be judged on both painting and conversion work, and should adhere to Games Workshop's established imagery. Basically folks, this is a chance to show off some really cool Chaos conversions and paint jobs from either Warhammer or Warhammer 40,000!

11. Best New Marine Chapter
    Entries in this category should consist of a squad of 5-10 Tactical Space Marines painted to represent a new, unpublished Space Marine Chapter. The Chapter must follow the Codex: Space Marines guidelines, and should reflect the background of the Warhammer 40,000 universe. Providing a movement tray is recommended.

12. The Open Competition
    The Golden Demon Open Competition is literally what it says it is: an open opportunity for you to let your imagination run totally wild. Your entry can range from a single figure to a sweeping dio-rama. Anyone can enter the open competition, including Games Workshop staff, and this is the only category available to previous overall Golden Demon winners!!!

Remember, no matter how wild your entry, the judges will be looking for well painted miniatures that adhere to the imagery and ethos of Games Workshop’s unique gaming universe. Conversions are allowed, but should also be consistent with the atmosphere of the game world and the spirit of the miniatures. The only restriction is your entry MUST NOT be larger than 18"x18"x18". Go for it!!!
SET BATTLE TABLES - As with the other games, these tables have all the galactic scenery and entire fleets of ships ready to go. You must register to play on these tables!

Table #1 - Battlefleet Gothic Demonstration Table - Chaos vs. the Imperium
Chaos and Imperial fleets clash in the vast darkness of the Gothic Sector. Grab your opportunity to learn how to play the new game of spaceship battles in the 41st millennium!

Table #2 - Hunt for the Traitor - Chaos vs. the Imperium
A rebel Imperial battle cruiser has been detected cruising through the sector with a fleet of Chaos battleships and the Imperial fleet has been dispatched to bring the heretic to justice!

BRING & BATTLE TABLES - Have your fleet all set? Want to test your mettle in battles with other Battlefleet Gothic Admirals? These tables are the perfect place to do so. Bring your own fleet selected according to each mission. You do not have to register to play on these tables, simply show up and go at it!

Table #1 - Battle For the Gryphon's System - Free For All
The Fargeworld of Gryphon's IV is under attack for control of its massive shipyards. Orks, Chaos, Eldar, and Imperial fleets have assembled from all over the sector to battle for control of the system. Bring up to a 500 point fleet built using the appropriate fleet list with no admirals or upgrades as well as data cards for your ships.

Table #2 - Back From Whence You Came - Imperial Fleet vs. ?
Ork, Chaos, Eldar, and rogue Imperial convoys are trying to escape the Gothic sector and avoid elimination. But first they must break through the barricade of Fleet Pacificus to make it to a jump point just over the border. Can you make it through? Bring up to a 500 point fleet built using the appropriate fleet list with no admirals or upgrades as well as data cards for your ships.

---

NECROMUNDA

BRING & BATTLE
You do not have to sign up for this table!

All Out Gang Warfare
Free For All
It's time for old scores to be settled the only way these gangs know how, with bloodshed! Bring a 1000 credit NEW gang and battle for supremacy of the Underhive.

WHAT DO I DO WHEN I'M WAITING FOR MY GAME TO START?

There's plenty of cool stuff to spend time in between gaming sessions, or if you're not signed up to play for a while. We've added a few more of these special Mini-Games to this year's Games Day Inemp.

MORDHEIM CITY OF THE DAMNED

DEMONSTRATIONS
Periodic throughout both days.

Mordheim Demo Games
Stop by and get a look at the latest development of the new fantasy skirmish game set in the infamous City of the Damned. If you're lucky, you'll be able to get in on the action and play, perhaps even challenge Tuomas himself!

---

BLOOD BOWL

SPEED PAINTING COMPEITION
Throughout both days.

2 MINUTE DRILL CHALLENGE
Throughout both days.

...your team's behind, you must score! You'll face off against a selected Games Workshop staff member in this desperation play, one-off challenge.

---

TROLLSLAYERS
Throughout both days.

Whack-A-Troll! The Mail Order Trolls will be there running this wild free for all with Trolls and Trollsayers running rampant and bashing each other senseless. If you think your Troll or Trollsayer has the skills to wrench some havoc, then bring 'em along. But you don't have to have your own, we'll be more than happy to hook you up. If you whack 'em too hard though, you'll be sorry!
Dear White Dwarf Staff,

The only thing that I could think of to make your mag better would be more Necromunda, and I’m sure that there are a lot of Necromunda fans out there that would agree with me. It would be nice to see a Necromunda battle report now and then, along with some Necromunda artwork (have Kev Walker do it. He’s awesome!).

Joe Carro
Casco, ME

We have to agree with you and your love of Necromunda. It’s simply a great game with loads of possibilities for excitement. Now, there are currently no plans for any features in the White Dwarf for Necromunda related material. However for all you Guilder fanatics (and those shadier characters), the Black Library has released its latest publication, Gang War. Inside you’ll be able to find all kinds of great information on Necromunda, from painting tips to scenario ideas. This is the perfect tool for any Necromunda enthusiast. It’s fun for the entire House!

Dear White Dwarf,

I saw the chair made of human skin in WD#230 and I was wondering if the Skin Chair would make an appearance at Games Day?

Jeff
Chicago, IL

What answer could we possibly give? We are but slaves to the Skin Chair and must do its bidding. To find out what its whim is you’ll just have to get a ticket and come to Games Day ‘99 to see for yourself.

White Dwarf Staff,

In White Dwarf issue #228, you introduce Dwarfs as a new warband in Mordheim. I have a great love for the ancient ones, but I was disappointed in the profile of the Troll Slayers. You said it yourself that there are few better fighters than Troll Slayers in the Known World, but their profile is no better than an average dwarf. A Troll would have them for lunch with those kinds of stats...

Yours Sincerely,
John Switzer
CMP Pendleton, CA

Troll Slayers are an awesome opponent for anyone to meet on the field of battle. However, all Dwarfs are sturdy and impressive fighters. What a Troll Slayer offers above all else his brethren is a readiness for glorious death in combat. They will never run from battle, fighting until every last Troll Slayer has fallen. Only then will their mark of shame be removed and they will be able to rest in peace. Death before dishonor!

Dear Games Workshop,

I may as well get to the point before you lose interest and throw this in your million dollar paper shredder. I was wondering if it is possible for your company to begin a TV series? Whether it is a Saturday morning cartoon or an informative painting session with our good friend Mike McVey. Maybe it could be like your magazine or involve helpful gaming tactics. Whatever it is, I’m sure you’d have me watching it, as well as the other million and a half dedicated gamers...

Jamie Macari
St. Catherines, ON

First, let us dispel the myth of the million dollar paper shredder; We spend almost all our time and money designing great new models and games for you that there just isn’t enough left over for that shredder (not that we’d shred any of our readers’ mail). Though there isn’t a television program in the works for Games Workshop, painting lessons and other helpful services are as near as your local Games Workshop Hobby Center, so stop in sometime and say hello. We’d love to help you out.

Greetings and salutations,

I have some questions. I have recently purchased the Citadel Miniatures 1999 Annual. Everything seemed perfect until I realized there weren’t any Chaos Dwarfs other than the ones from Blood Bowl. Then I realized there were no Necrons for 40K! Plus there were no main characters for the Lizardmen. Why has the Annual been deprived of these miniatures? On a completely different subject, how many different Citadel Miniatures are there? Also, where can I get a Citadel Miniatures The 1999 Complete Catalog?

Sincerely,
Andreas Peterson
Salt Lake City, Utah

Ah, a quick and perceptive eye you have. The Annual is our aid to all the Games Workshop hobbyists to help you find the different miniatures we have out in our current line. Chaos Dwarfs do not appear in the Annual simply because they are no longer part of the current line of miniatures we produce. However, you can still get these fine miniatures through our Archive service. As for the Necrons, originally they were not going to find their way into the line, but due to popular demand, they were brought back only too late for the Annual. Previously, there weren’t any Lizardmen character models, but we know you’ll love all the new Lizardmen models this month. They’re spawning out of control!
1999 GUIDELINES

- All entries must be Citadel Miniatures.
- All single miniatures must be mounted on the appropriate gaming slottabases.
- Where a category gives an overall size restriction, it MUST be adhered to (else our Ogres will squish it down for you!).
- Slight conversions are allowed, (except in Battle Scenes, Chaos conversions, or Open categories where anything goes), but the judges will be looking for well-painted miniatures foremost, and any painting or modeling should adhere to the spirit of Games Workshop's fantasy imagery.
- No entries from any previous Games Day will be accepted.
- All competitors must enter their miniatures in person at Games Day, July 10th. No mail-in or store entries will be accepted.
- The greatest care will be taken with every competitor's entries, but Games Workshop can accept no responsibility for any models that are accidentally damaged or broken.
- Entry into the competition gives Games Workshop the right to display, photograph, and publish any entry as they see fit. The Judges' decision is final and no correspondence will be entered into regarding the judging process.
- Previous overall winners may only enter the Open Competition.
- We try to photograph all winning entries for future inclusion in White Dwarf magazine, and this may require us retaining your figures until well after the awards ceremony. See the Golden Demon schedule in the Games Day program for exact times. If you really want to see your entry in White Dwarf, please plan on staying to the end of the day to give us time.

Greetings citizens, and welcome to the Emperor’s most holy Chapter Approved column. This is a great month for Chapter Approved, mainly because we’re not going to publish an army list for once, giving me plenty of room to include an eclectic selection of subjects. I’ve been receiving a steady stream of letters from some seriously warped 40K players across the world and now, at last, some of them will get a chance to make it into print. I should offer thanks and commiserations in particular to all those who sent in Necron lists – unfortunately we had the one from Rick juiced and ready to go about the same time the lists started arriving. Also in this month’s Chapter Approved we have a selection of Questions and Answers, lovingly prepared by Gav Thorpe, Jarvis Johnson and myself, with a few (this is a lie) extra designer’s notes on close combats. Because Gav is such a nice chap, he’s ensured that we have some new stuff too, specifically rules for smoke and blind grenades in 3rd edition 40K, plus a new Sacred Rites table so the Sisters of Battle can be more sanctimonious than ever.

Smoke & Blind Grenades in 40K

By Gav Thorpe

In 2nd edition 40K, many squads could be equipped with smoke or blind grenades, which could be used to block line of sight. Although intended to screen the unit from enemy fire, various nasty and devious tactics were evolved beyond this laudable intention (such as racing a bike squadron in front of your enemy’s heaviest weapons and dumping blind grenades right in front of them). Blind grenades also remained in play, which meant that in many battles towards the end of the the last edition’s life cycle, lots of time was spent at the start of every player’s turn rolling dice to see what happened to the plethora of markers on the battlefield (as well as plasma grenades and missiles, models on fire, vortex grenades, Destructor templates – need I go on?). For these reasons, we decided not to worry about blind grenades in 3rd edition.

However, I was painting a squad of Space Marine Scouts the other day and thought ‘Jes has gone to all the effort of designing some blind grenades on these; isn’t it a shame we took them out of the rules’. Then an idea struck me, complete with cartoon light bulb appearing over my head with a DING! Why not just use the rule for a vehicle’s smoke launchers? So, here it is...

The following unit types can be equipped with blind or smoke grenades (in case you don’t know, blind grenades are just a more hi-tech version, which cause electromagnetic interference on scanners and such like, a bit like a chaff dispenser on a warplane). A unit carries enough blind/smoke grenades for one use during the battle. Blind/smoke grenades are used in the shooting phase instead of the unit firing any weapons. Mark the unit as using its blind/smoke grenades by placing cotton wool around them (or something similar). A unit cannot assault on the same turn it uses blind/smoke grenades. The blind/smoke screen lasts until the start of the player’s next turn, and until then the unit counts as in cover, with a 5+ cover save. Because they count as in cover, models in the unit will also strike first if assaulted, unless the enemy is armed with something like frag grenades, or has an ability that allows them to always strike first (like Howling Banshee Aspect Warriors).

The following units can be given blind/smoke grenades for the points cost listed (all points are per model, every model in the squad must be given the same combination of grenades):

- Space Marine Scouts and Scout Bikes 2 pts
- Space Marine Bikes, Attack Bikes 2 pts
- Assault squads 4 pts
  (including Blood Angels Veteran Assault squads and Honor Guards)
- Imperial Guard Storm Troopers 2 pts
- Ork Kommandos 2 pts
- Eldar Guardian Storm squads 2 pts
The latest issue of INFERNO! kicks off with an incredible cover from Martin Hanford. Martin has excelled himself with this film poster-style picture for Obovis Tactics, the long running, all-action comic strip.

Speaking of which, there’s another blood-soaked episode. Our three heroes have managed to escape from the planet on board a Thunderhawk Gunship. Does this mean our intrepid heroes have made it to safety or will Antenor’s rusty flying skills land them in further trouble?

I am sure all fans of Bill King will rejoice when they hear that there’s another cracking Gotrek and Felix story in this INFERNO!

Lost for millennia in the warp, the Imperial Ship Celestion appears like a phantom and spells doom to any who encounter it. Find out all about this damned ship in our awesome Inquisitor’s report, over eight pages of splendid illustrations from Ralph Horsley.

All this, plus more stories from Alex Hammond, Matt Farrer and Rani Kellock, and artwork from Mike Perkins, Wayne England and many more.

And lo from beyond the halls of time and the infinitude of the firmament they came – letters, letters without number, beyond counting they were and verily I became knee deep in the rustling multitude until I despaired. And then I decided to have my own little letters pages. Over the next few pages are some of the interesting letters I’ve received recently, all of which discuss some good ideas for 40K which you might like to adopt for your games.

Dear Andy Chambers,
My name is Matthew Farren and I am a Chaos player (Iron Warriors). I started playing just before the changeover of rules; I must admit the new rules are a lot better.
I have noticed that in the rulebook, nearly all the armies have appendices apart from Chaos. As you can probably guess, this letter is about a new appendix. The Iron Warriors are supposed to be good at sieges and use big engines of destruction. I believe that any Iron Warriors player should be able to take two Dreadnoughts minimum (if they choose this option) for the price of one +50 points and they count as one Heavy Support choice. Or another way is that the two Dreadnoughts together count as one choice and cost 100 points plus weapons. Thanks for your time.
Yours Sincerely
Matthew Farren

Iron Warriors Getting Bigger?
Matthew may just be trying to play on my well-known Chaotic streak here, especially as I collect Iron Warriors too! Allowing the Iron Warriors to pick two Dreads as one Heavy Support choice would seem fair enough in view of their background, but there has to be a down side too, otherwise the Iron Warriors are simply better than the other Legions. I'd suggest something like limiting the Iron Warriors to less Fast Attack and Elite choices to compensate. I think it goes without saying that it’s not a good idea to let the Iron Warriors have more Dreadnoughts AND make them cheaper...

CODEX BLOOD ANGELS

QA
What happens if you take two Blood Angels Chaplains? Do you get two Death Company units (evil laugh)?
You can only ever have one Death Company unit. If you take two Chaplains as two HQ choices, then both Chaplains and their Death Company Space Marines form a single unit.

QA
Is Chaplain Lemartes a character or an independent character? In his description it doesn’t say one way or the other.
If the special character Chaplain Lemartes is not accompanied by Death Company then he is an independent character.

QA
Do Veteran Assault squads automatically include a Veteran Sergeant as standard? Or do extra points have to be paid to upgrade the Sergeant?
Veteran Assault squads have an ordinary Sergeant as standard and must pay +12 points to have a proper Veteran Sergeant.

QA
Why is a Blood Angels Force Commander only Leadership 9?
Because we made a boo-boo. A Blood Angels Force Commander is Leadership 10 like all other Space Marine Force Commanders (oops!).

QA
Why are Rhinos and Razorbacks cheaper for the Honour Guard than anybody else?
Because it's a mistake. The Rhino/Razorback option in the Honour Guard entry should be 65/85 points respectively (oops, oops!)

QA
Why are Baal Predator sponsons twice as expensive as anyone else’s?
The sponson costs on a Baal Predator are actually for a pair of sponsons, not for each sponson like it says (oops, oops!).

QA
Blood Angels Rhinos and Razorbacks have the overcharged engine rule which seems to imply that the bonus movement they get must be taken in a straight line, is this the case?
When a Rhino or Razorback uses its overcharged engines, the extra 6" move must be straight ahead.

QA
In WD 229, the Army of Death scenario stated the Blood Angels deploy 24" away from the enemy, but the map shows 18" between deployment zones. Which is correct?
Oops, it's 24" (do you really think we'd unleash an entire Death Company from only 18" away?? No don't answer that).
In the Space Marine Codex it states that a Space Marine army can choose to arrive via drop pods in scenarios where the Deep Strike rules are used. Does this mean that at the start of the game:

1. The army is in reserve and units are deployed using the Deep Strike rules on the turns when they arrive.
2. All the units in the army are deployed via Deep Strike at the beginning of the game?

A

1. is correct. Deep Striking troops are always in reserve at the start of the game unless specifically stated otherwise in the scenario (as is the case in the Space Marine Planetfall scenario for example). This applies to Tyranids dropped in Mycetic Spores too.

In the Drop Pods rules in the Space Marine Codex it also states that Land Speeders may deploy using the Deep Strike rules. How fast are the Speeders assumed to be going when they arrive?

The Speeders are assumed to be moving at over 6" per turn, so they may fire one weapon and count all hits as glancing.

Q

Can a Tyranid Spore Mine kill you by crossfire?

Yes it can, because it is an enemy model — the presence of a Spore Mine behind you as you start to fall back is going to be just as dangerous and demoralizing as the presence of an Imperial Guardsman or anything else!

A

Does it explode if it does so?

No, a Spore Mine is only detonated if it moves within 1" of a non-Tyranid model, not the other way round.

Q

Can Biovores target anywhere on the table or must they fire at units?

A Biovore may target anywhere within range. The procedure we generally use is to place the Spore Mine model at the desired target spot, then guess the range and adjust the position of the model as appropriate, then roll for scatter.

A

If, for example, I upgrade an Assault Marine armed with a bolt pistol and close combat weapon to have a plasma pistol instead, does the Marine lose his close combat weapon as well as his bolt pistol?

Ah, this is an oversight we made when we were worrying about models upgraded to have heavy weapons keeping their basic weapons as well. To keep things clear we ruled that a model which upgraded its weapon lost its starting weapons. However in the case of a model armed with a pistol and a close combat weapon, and you’re just upgrading the pistol, the model can keep the close combat weapon, or conversely if you were to upgrade the close combat weapon (to a power weapon for example) you would keep the pistol.

Q

Sisters of Battle Rhinos are listed as costing both 45 and 50 points in 40K, which is correct?

A Rhino costs 45 points as listed in its own entry, not 50 points as in the transport options in the unit entries.

Q

Which vehicle upgrades may be chosen for different vehicles? The Codexes are confusing and contradictory on this subject.

The Codex army list entries tell you which upgrades may be chosen for different vehicles.

Simon Shuker says...

Recently I’ve been experimenting with the use of Spore Mines and Biovores and this seems a good time to mention my ideas. When fighting against tough opponents like Space Marines I’ve found Spore Mines are a lot more useful for their potential destruction than their actual capabilities. By targeting areas near an enemy squad, the Spore Mines become a more immediate threat than the approaching Tyranid monsters and an opponent will often shoot the Spore Mine (rather than your troops) to stop it floating near his squads and exploding to cover them in icky acidic slime (evil snigger).
Allocating Attacks Against Characters

Characters are always treated as being a separate unit as far as the rules for allocating close combat attacks are concerned, including characters that are an upgrade for an enemy unit like Veteran Sergeants or Nobs.

In this example the attacks made by Striking Scorpion B must be allocated against the Ork Nob leading the unit, while the attacks made by Striking Scorpion C must be allocated against the Boyz. Striking Scorpion A's attacks can either be allocated against the Boyz or the Nob, or both if he has two or more attacks to make.

Removing Casualties In Close Combat

As with shooting attacks, it is the owning player who decides which of his models suffer wounds that are inflicted in close combat. Wounds from attacks allocated to a unit are taken first on models in base contact with the attacker, then on models from the unit that are within 2", and then on models from the unit that are further away. Where there is a choice between equally eligible models (i.e. two models from a unit are in base contact and one wound is inflicted), then the owning player may choose which model he will lose.

Please note that in a multiple combat where several units are involved, excess wounds do not carry over from unit to unit; if you wipe a unit out, any 'left over' wounds are wasted.

Also note that attacks allocated against a character can only wound that character; excess wounds don't 'carry over' to other models nearby, even if the character was an upgrade for the unit, (i.e. in the example pictured above, attacks allocated against the Nob could only effect him, and wouldn't 'carry through' to the rest of the Boyz in the unit).

Sweeping Advances

Models that make a sweeping advance may be fired on by the enemy before the next assault phase, but only if it is the enemy player’s turn (i.e. you don't get to shoot in the shooting phase unless it is your own turn). The unit making the sweeping advance can be fired upon by any enemy units (subject to range and line of sight of course), not just the one being assaulted. One final note; watch out when using blast templates against units making a sweeping advance, as a wily opponent can (and probably will) reposition the template so that you catch your own troops as well as his!

Vehicles In Close Combat

Units in base contact with an enemy vehicle, apart from one with a Weapon Skill (like a Dreadnought or War Walker for example), do not count as being engaged in close combat, and are in all ways treated as if they were not in base-to-base contact with an enemy model as far as the rules are concerned. This means that enemy units may shoot at them (though be careful with those blast templates again!), and that they can fire themselves. By the same token, the vehicle can shoot and be fired upon.
CLOSE COMBAT NOTES

One of the problems with writing rules is that there are sometimes things that seem self-evident to you, but may be somewhat less so to others when they read the rules. In the new edition of 40K one of the areas that players have some trouble with is the close combat rules. We’ve therefore put together the following guidelines in order to make things a little bit clearer. These explanations are by necessity rather long, but don’t worry, you don’t have to memorize them, just refer to them when (or if) needed.

Failed Charges
Sometimes a unit will declare a charge, but fail to get any models into base contact with the enemy. For example, a unit that assaulted through difficult terrain might fail to reach the target of their charge. Under such circumstances the close combat is not fought, and the charge is considered to have failed, even if one or more of the chargers managed to get within 2" of the enemy. The same rule applies in similar circumstances where models from a unit are within 2" of the enemy but not in base contact; a unit must have at least one model in base contact with the enemy in order to fight in the close combat phase.

Drawn Combats
Note that a combat where one side lost but passed its morale check is considered a drawn combat, and that drawn combats do not only occur when both players roll the same number on the Moral High Ground dice roll. Basically, if neither side runs away at the end of a combat, then it is drawn, and unengaged models from each side must move up to 6" towards the enemy and try to get into the fight (see the rules for drawn combats on page 69 of the rules).

Allocating Attacks In Close Combat
There is an important difference between the way you allocate shooting and close combat attacks. Shooting attacks are made against a single enemy unit, while close combat attacks may be made against several enemy units. This means a unit can attack different enemy units in the close combat phase, which is not allowed when shooting.

Because units can fight more than one enemy unit in a close combat, the attacks of the unit must be allocated out against enemy units before they are resolved. Assuming the unit is in contact with more than one enemy unit (as will often be the case) you must allocate the attacks made by the models in the unit against enemy units that are in base-to-base contact with them, or an enemy unit within 2" if a model is not in base contact. If several enemy units are eligible, you may choose which to attack, and can split attacks between them if you wish. This sounds confusing but is easy to do in practice. Here’s an example of how it works:

In the example above, the Space Marine player must allocate the attacks from models B and C against the Genestealer unit, and the attacks from model E against the Termagants, as these are the units they are in base-to-base contact with. Model D is in base contact with models from both units, so his attacks can be allocated to either unit or, if he has more than one attack, they may be split between the two. Model A’s attack must be allocated against the Genestealers, as he is within 2" of them and not within 2" of the Termagants.

Allocating Attacks Against Specific Models
You may allocate the attacks made by a character against a specific target model in an enemy unit, but only if the enemy model is in base contact with him. This allows a character to target his attacks on a specific model, taking out the member of a unit armed with a heavy weapon, for example. If you allocate a character’s attacks in this way then any wounds he inflicts cannot ‘carry-through’ and can only effect the specific enemy model he attacked.

The only other time you may allocate attacks against a specific model in a unit is if he is a character, as described above, or if the model has a different Weapon Skill or Toughness to any other models in the unit, as described on page 64 of the rules. It has to be said that it is extremely rare for non-character models in a unit to have differing Weapon Skills or Toughness, as normally all of the models in the unit have the same profile. However, when it does occur you must allocate the attacks against the different type of enemy models, and any wounds you inflict can only be taken on models in the enemy unit with the appropriate characteristics.
ATTACKER’S BRIEF
You have been chosen to lead a crack commando force to kill the enemy high commander, with the intention of causing enough confusion to disrupt their attack and bring you victory.

DEFENDER’S BRIEF
As you were enjoying your afternoon nap (or prayer session, or meal, or psychic communion with the Hive Mind etc.) one of your trusted bodyguards brought you news that a large enemy force has appeared on the horizon. You must endeavor to stay alive until reinforcements can arrive to carry you to safety.

SCENARIO SPECIAL RULES
The Assassins mission uses the Fortifications, Hidden Set-Up, Infiltrators, Random Game Length and Reserves scenario special rules.

SET-UP
1. The defender’s deployment zone is up to 18" on from one of the long table edges, in which they may place fortifications. The attacker’s deployment zone starts 18" further towards the opposite edge.
2. The defender’s HQ must be set up on the table, but any Fast Attack unit must be placed in reserve. Other units have the option of being reserves or being set up on the table. Once decided, set up using the Hidden Set-Up rules. The HQ must be at least 12" from any edge.
3. The attacker deploys his entire force.
4. The defender reveals his set-up.
5. Any attacking infiltrators may make one free move, ignoring terrain. Eldar may not fleet foot.
6. The attacker gets the first turn.

MISSION OBJECTIVE
The attacker wins if he can completely wipe out the defender’s HQ unit. Note that in this scenario the defender’s HQ is subject to the They Shall Know No Fear rule, and will always regroup, because otherwise they might just flee off the table, and what fun would that be?

RESERVES
The defender’s reserves enter from his own table edges.

GAME LENGTH
The game lasts a variable number of turns.

LINE OF RETREAT
Troops fall back towards the long table edge of their own deployment zone.
The mission on the opposite page has been sent to me by Laurence Sinclair, a puritanical Sisters of Battle player who also helpfully included a number of threats to try to bring forward the Sisters of Battle Codex. Acta non verba, Laurence. One of Laurence’s ‘concerns’ about not having a Codex for the Sisters was that they no longer got the benefits of offering their prayers to the Emperor at the start of the battle. Gav has already been doing some preliminary work for the Sisters, including a new Sacred Rites table, which I’ve flitched from his desk to give you a look.

Sacred Rites

By Gav Thorpe

Before the fighting begins, the Sisters of Battle kneel in prayer, offering their thanks to the Emperor and asking for His protection and guidance. The Battle Sisters are invigorated and emboldened by their prayers, instilled with grim courage and determination to overcome their foes.

Any Sisters of Battle infantry units (i.e., not vehicles) may take part in these Sacred Rites at the start of a battle. For each unit, roll a dice on the Sacred Rites table to see what effect their prayers have. Higher ranking members of the Adepta Sororitas inspire greater acts of selfless sacrifice and dedication, and so may add a bonus to the dice roll, as listed below (only apply the highest modifier):

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Character</th>
<th>Sacred Rites bonus</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Canoness</td>
<td>+3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Celestian Superior</td>
<td>+2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Veteran Sister Superior</td>
<td>+1</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

Note: For a Canoness or Celestian Superior to lead a squad in the Sacred Rites, the character must be set up with the squad at the start of the battle.

If the character leading the squad in the Sacred Rites subsequently leaves the unit, any benefit from the Sacred Rites is lost for the rest of the battle — the unit will think they are being abandoned by the Emperor! Note that this does not happen if the character is killed whilst with the unit — they become martyrs! The unit also loses its Sacred Rites if another character takes over leadership of the unit.

The results of the Sacred Rites apply to all members of the squad and any characters who start the battle with them, including the character leading the Sacred Rites.

FRED OR DEAD!

This month we have something of a run on 40K Chaos Space Marine armies. You know what it’s like – you wait months for one and then two come along at once! Mind you, when an army is as nice as Fred Reed’s, I can’t see anybody complaining!

Fred Reed is no stranger to these pages. Even though his job as Hobby Manager for the South West region takes up most of his time, he still manages to produce really first rate armies. Several have been featured in previous issues of White Dwarf and he has picked up many awards at staff tournaments for the superb quality of his painting and modeling. Fred recently finished this enormous Warhammer 40,000 Chaos army which we just had to show. As you can see, Fred has really pushed the boat out and produced some wild conversions – check out the Iron Warriors Dreadnought that uses hardly any Dreadnought bits at all, or the Predator covered with sliced and bleeding flesh! More than just a collection of stunning conversions however, this is a fantastic army and one that any gamer would be justly proud of.

Eventually Fred hopes to paint up enough troops for three separate Chaos armies: one Khorne army, very much geared to fast attack and close combat; a second army entirely composed of Chaos Space Marines – mainly Iron Warriors and Black Legion; and finally a third army with, as he puts it, “all the weird stuff”. This last army will eventually contain things like Noise Marines, Thousand Sons, Daemons and Cultists. As you can see from the photographs over the page, Fred is well on the way to finishing these armies. The only question now is – what will he do next?

Remember this? Way back in White Dwarf 203 we showed you Fred’s amazing 40K Chaos Thunderhawk Gunship conversion. We like it so much that we thought we’d dig it out again! Practically every inch of this awesome machine has been converted in some way.
To the writer of 'Chapter Approved',

I have enclosed some rules for bayonets for Imperial Guardmen in Warhammer 40,000. If you wish you could send me loads of freebies: 'What? What d'you mean no'? Ah well, just print my name if you choose to print the rules and I'll be happy. Oh, and if they make it into Codex Imperial Guard then put my name in the credits. What? What d'you mean 'no' again? Hey, what's that red dot between your eyes?

But seriously, you have my permission to modify them as you see fit. What? You would anyway? Ah well, you can't win 'em all.

These rules are inspired by that great film, 'Zulu', in which the entire company is armed with bayonets, and at the end the Colour Sergeant attributes the victory to a bayonet "with some guts b'hind it". The stuff legends are made of!

Bayonets: +15pts per Guardsman with lasgun

Some Imperial Guard squads are issued with bayonets by their commanding officers for special missions, whilst some regiments, notably the Praetorians, maintain whole squads of Bayonettiers. These men make ideal close combat troops and are often used to hold a position that is in danger of being overrun. The main benefit of using a bayonet is that the Guardsman may use both ends of his gun to attack with. However, often an enemy squad that makes a determined charge at Bayonettiers has a third of its numbers cut down before they even throw a punch, having been impaled on the bayonet of a grim-faced Guardsman who is determined to defend his position.

This upgrade may be given to any squad that contains Imperial Guardmen armed with lasguns, ie. Command HQs, Storm Troopers, Command Sections, Infantry squads, Armored Fist squads, Mortar squads, Fire Support squads and Anti-Tank squads. All members of the squad who are armed with lasguns must have bayonets clearly shown on the models to take this upgrade. You must buy bayonets for all of the members of the squad armed with lasguns or none of them (ie. you may not purchase a bayonet for some men but not others).

Any model equipped with a bayonet gets +1 Attack and also gets to strike first in close combat regardless of Initiative. This bonus is only conferred in the open – if either side is in cover then the order of attacking is determined as normal.

If a Guardsman with a bayonet is charged (not if he charges), he may attempt to impale one of the enemies who is charging him on his bayonet. Roll a D6 before all other attacks are worked out. On a roll of 5 or 6 the enemy takes a wound (normal armor saves apply). The wounds inflicted by impaling count towards the combat result. This special attack is cancelled out against troops with frag grenades (the Guardsmen are too busy keeping their heads down). Also, if an enemy is successfully impaled then the Guardsman loses his +1 Attack bonus (he has to waste time scraping the corpse off his bayonet).

David Helps, age 16.

They Don't Like It Up 'Em

Hm, I can't get over the feeling that David's got a little bit carried away with the idea of the bayonet. +1 Attack/strike first/impale is a lot to get out of strapping a knife on the end of your gun, so why doesn't everyone do it? To be fair, I imagine that David is also thinking in terms of the Guardsmen being specially trained and having lots and lots of bayonet drill. All that being said, +1 Attack is a good sense to charge a lot of points for Bayonettier-boys, which would ensure that they wouldn't get completely out of hand. Personally I'd be inclined to make bayonets cheaper and less effective – something like +3 points each and give models +1 Initiative.

Dear Mr (Andy) Chambers,

I am writing concerning what I see to be a bit of an inconsistency in the new 40K rules. What concerns me is the use of 'anti-personnel' type weapons, like multi-lasers, scatter lasers, etc. For years gunners have used 'Piercing' Loads but these have never been seen as the same as 'anti-personnel' loads. In particular I'm thinking of the new 40K rule that weapons with a +3 save could only be rolled to penetrate the target by 50%. I can see how the new rule would work in the case of lasers but I don't see how it would work in the case of anti-personnel weapons like howitzers.

So what do you say? Is this rule worthy of 'Chapter Approved' status? Do you agree that this presents a discrepancy, and if so do you agree to any house rule that does not work to his advantage... Armor Piercing Uncle Andy Sez: this is an interesting idea but it overlooks one thing – a lot of light vehicles like Warbuggies and Vypers have exposed crewmen (and are usually lightly armored to boot). This means they would be just as vulnerable to shooting as guys on foot. Also a light vehicle's armor value represents their speed and maneuverability, plus the fact that shots could go straight through them without damaging anything too vital, rather than how thick their armor plates are. A better solution might be to rule that weapons with an AP of 6 or lower can only cause glancing hits against vehicles.

Khorne Berzerker Champion. This figure has been converted using an Ork power claw to make a really monstrous power fist.

Fred originally converted this figure to represent Arhra – the Fallen Phoenix of the Eldar. But it fits really well in his Chaos force.

Just how much can a miniature be converted? Fred has really gone berserk (oh dear, oh dear... – Fat Bloke) on this Khorne Dreadnought.

Ahriman leads a squad of heavily converted Thousand Sons Chaos Space Marines.
Arguably the most striking figures in the whole army, these colorful Noise Marines are led by this Aspiring Champion in Terminator armor.
So, what's in it then...

ACE HOUSE RULES: If it's cool and original house rules you want, from troops types to special characters, army lists, vehicles, new weapons, magic items, skills, terrain rules and much more – you'll find them in the Journal. For example, in Journal 30, we have Tom O'Brennan's 'Witch Hunter Warbands', giving you a full Warhammer ally list for these deranged puritans out to punish the guilty and protect the innocent!

COOL CONVERSIONS: If you want to see some of the best model conversions around and learn how to make and paint them for yourself, then it's all covered in Dok Butcha. Check out Journal 29 for Neil Rutledge's Dethnawt Ork Dreadnought conversions.

WARPED VISIONS: If you want to see cool artwork from up-and-coming artists then check out 'Warped Visions', which brings you some of the best amateur fantasy art there is, such as Mark Holland's Terminators from Journal 24.

INCREDBLE SCENARIOS: There are ready-to-play scenarios for all of our games systems – complete with special characters, extra rules and anything else you need to get playing. In Journal 28, we ran Andy Judson's 'Attack on Doran VI' for WH40K, which presented rules for a new troop type – Citizen Militia – as well as a particularly foul new special character – Festamus the Putrid.

Is it Official?

We sometimes get letters from disgruntled gamers complaining that their mates won't let them use the rules in the Journal because they are not 'Official'. This is partly down to us stamping things as 'Chapter Approved' or stating that certain rules are 'official', in the Journal and in White Dwarf. This has caused confusion for some gamers. The worst thing in the world for our hobby would be a drift towards 'rules lawyers' and officialdom - we get enough of that from the tax office and traffic police (no hint of bitterness there, eh Steve? – Fat Bloke). We thought we'd let none other than Rick Priestley set the record straight:

'Most gamers like to invent their own rules, to invent characters and perhaps even design their own scenarios. I know of players who go even further, changing the basic rules to suit their own style of play. And why not indeed! Warhammer is supposed to be a broad set of game rules that veterans can adapt, change or add to as they please...

'I'd like to make a plea about queries, questions and 'officialdom' in the hobby. Warhammer is inherently adaptable, the rules and ideas in the game are a springboard to better and greater things. I encourage players to develop the game to suit themselves, to invent and change rules to their own taste and to explore their own ideas about rules, modeling, scenery and background.

'This is what makes gaming such an absorbing and fascinating hobby. Indeed, Warhammer would be all the poorer were it not for the influx of ideas and innovation from its many devotees.'

From the Warhammer rulebook, p112.

There it is, straight from the horse's... er, Rick's mouth. So, let's put this 'official' thing where it belongs (if you're competing in a tournament or playing at a club you will have to adhere to any restrictions set by the organizers) and get on with the fun of our hobby! If gamers put forward fresh ideas that have been researched and playtested to ensure that they are well balanced, it is then up to their fellow gamers to use, experiment with or change them further at their own discretion. Of course, if you do have cool ideas, let us have a look at them!

Whatever rules you end up using is fine, but please don't try to justify your actions or force your opinion, by saying that

Continued overleaf...
The Citadel Journal – the bi-monthly magazine written by GW fanatics for GW fanatics.
It’s undergone a few changes since Fat Bloke’s era.
Journal Editor Steve
Hambrook explains...

Oh dear, look at those dreadful sidies... – Fat Bloke

What’s it all about then?
Being a Games Workshop enthusiast is a whole lot more than just being a collector and painter of Citadel Miniatures, it’s being totally immersed in the Games Workshop hobby. By that we mean painting, collecting armies, playing games, converting models, entering tournaments and competitions, modeling terrain, joining (or even running) games clubs, but above all, having a laugh and enjoying yourself (you know someone who plays and told you all about this, do you Steve? – Fat Bloke).

How many of us are there?
In the UK alone we print around 100,000 White Dwarf magazines every month – now that’s a big hobby! There are over a hundred Games Workshop stores in the UK and countless other independent hobby stores that stock our games. In most major towns you’ll find at least a couple of gaming clubs dedicated to Games Workshop. Now that’s a BIG hobby!

And what’s the best thing about our hobby?
It’s not that we get to play the best wargames around, it’s not that we have the finest crafted miniatures at our disposal to paint and it’s not even the diverse group of nutters that we get to meet in the pursuit of our hobby. Freedom! Creativity! Jelly (EB? – Fat Bloke)! That’s what it’s all about! Warhammer, Warhammer 40K and all our other games are just the starting point for much bigger things. Our games offer you the freedom to get really involved, far more involved than you can in any strictly regulated sport. Within the framework of our worlds you can create your own rules, scenarios, campaigns, background, terrain, conversions and so on. After all, we don’t have the monopoly on good ideas just because we work here.
Thousands of enthusiasts around the world constantly write in to us with great ideas for our games. And that is where the Citadel Journal comes into play...

What’s this Citadel Journal
then, eh?
Ever since Rick Priestley wrote the first Warhammer rules, gamers have been writing back with their ideas for our games. Which is great, as it shows that players are keen enough to put pen to paper and get involved, rather than just being drip-fed by us. From the first irregular issues edited by none other than Rick back in the early eighties, to its revival in 1991 as a regular games magazine with bunker-beings such as Gav Thorpe and Ian Pickstock, through to its days as Mail Order’s very own mag during the much renowned ‘Fat Bloke era’, right up to its absorption in the sinister empire of the Black Library, the Citadel Journal has been one of our stalwarts, and one of our best-kept secrets.

And as long as you gamers keep sending us great ideas for our games, then every two months we will pull the very best together and print 96 pages of them in the Citadel Journal, so other GW fans get to see them too.
Every issue of the Journal is crammed to bursting with articles written by gamers like you. Each article is as much about the author and their gaming group as the games themselves because, after all, it is YOUR mag! The Journal is your chance to get your ideas in print!
Meet da Journal Krew...

The new Journal crew is a mixed bag of some old and some new faces (all of which, sadly, are equally frightening!). I'm Steve, the shiny new editor, the owner of those much maligned sideburns, which are becoming quite famous (or should that be infamous?) in their own right. I'm ably assisted by the statuesque Viking Warwick Kinrade, who injects a bit of die-hard hobby into the mag, leaving me to concentrate on all the awful puns. Anything too difficult for us (Typing? Spelling? Thinking? I hear you cry...) is left to that old hand Ian Pickstock, whose wealth of knowledge and expertise we constantly pilfer (check out the cool new covers). Finally, we are overseen by the inquisitive eye of Andy Jones, Black Library Inquisitor and le grande fromage.

What’s in the next Journal then?

For Journal 31, we’ve clawed our way through the mountain of submissions for the best articles to share, and here’s what we have in store for you:

DARK TIDE RISING: Warwick brings us a mammoth Warhammer campaign full of maps, special characters and bucket-loads of extra rules. Each of the four scenarios pits the malevolent forces of the Skaven against the Empire army of the legendary Count Mandred Skaven Slayer. Can you save the Empire from a crushing defeat? Or will you be the one finding favor with the Council of Thirteen?

CAVERNS OF THE BEASTMEN: There are loads of bloodthirsty foes to slay in this Warhammer Quest adventure: Bestigors, Gors and Ungors. Your warriors must fight against the ravenous Children of Chaos in their search for a stolen, sacred artefact.

BLOOD BOWL DOUBLE: This issue, not one but two Blood Bowl features - firstly, players can give those penalties the boot with some cool new rules for the kicking game. Then there’s the utterly manic ‘Deathbowl’, a game with two pitches and four teams, bringing a new, apocalyptic level of violence to Blood Bowl.

GORKERS AND MORKERS wouldn’t be proper Orks without four feet of mean, bad tempered, razor toothed fungus to cultivate. Yes, just what every Gorkamorka player has been waiting for – Squigs in Gorkamorka!

WH40K CAMPAIGN: In ‘The Siege of Herodopolis’, can the hard pressed forces of a small Imperial planet hold out against the marauding Ork hordes of Waaghi! Bigmowf until the Space Marines arrive?

OVERWATCH! We check out the Sheppy games club, in the south of England. And on top of that there’s more of your favorite fan artwork in Warped Visions, how not to get ‘ratty’ with Skaven tactics, the indispensable club contact listings, whilst the Mail Bag lets you get your opinions across no matter how mad, critical or downright ‘moany’ they may be! Plus loads of other stuff that we haven’t got time to go into right now, cos we seem to have run out of space...

So how do I get my ideas into print?

What we want:
- Scenarios or campaigns.
- Tried and tested house-rules or tactics.
- Ideas for modeling, converting and painting Citadel Miniatures.
- Reviews of tournaments, conventions or clubs that you have attended.
- Articles must be accompanied by photographs of your models, games, yourself and your friends.
- A few details about yourself – your age, where you’re from, which games you play and so on.
- If possible, supply articles on disc – we can read most formats. This makes our job a lot easier and we like that!
- Why not e-mail us your articles? You can send your ideas direct to the Journal Bunker on: journal@games-workshop.co.uk

Send your articles, or for a full set of Writer’s Guides write to:

Letting you have your say...

Seeing as the Journal is your mag (after all, you write it – we only put it together!), it’s important to know what you, the readers, are thinking. We may not act immediately on every issue that you raise in your letters (or at all, considering some of the strange suggestions we get!), but you can rest assured that we do take into account all of your opinions and will implement changes when we can, just to keep you lot happy!

I have been a Journal subscriber since issue 12. In that time the Journal has improved immensely and continues to do so. I like the current ‘digest’ format, 96 pages jam-packed with articles! There is always a good spread: scenarios, house rules, tournament reports and modelling tips, something for everyone, in other words. The move towards having photos with every article also makes them more interesting, giving you the chance to see how other gamers bring their ideas to life (so to speak). All in all, I find the Journal a really interesting read.

– David Kay, Brisbane, Oz

I think that the Journal serves as a springboard for modeling and gaming inspiration for ‘normal gamers’, in as much as it shows more realistic approaches to how to do things without the resources of Games Workshop. Whereas White Dwarf cannot show people’s house rules, the Journal is the ideal place for them. The Journal covers the hobby as opposed to the products.

– Tom Hebblerwhite, Northampton

The Journal has featured in my library for a long time, back to issue 7 or 8, and the current incarnation is the one that I find most useful. The Journal has become a place for GW hobbyists to share ideas, some great and some bizarre, yet they all allow gamers, who might never meet, a chance to present their pet projects before a wider audience than just their local gaming group. About the only thing that would make the Journal better is to make it an online magazine as well.

– Joshua Thaler, Dublin

What makes the Journal so special for me is that the vast majority of its contents are written by nov gamers such as myself. The magazine has a far more hands-on approach. There’s always more scope for experimentation. It gives you a chance to try something which you and your friends can discuss and modify as much as you like. This applies to everything in the Journal, whether it be a new scenario, a funky conversion or a set of interesting house rules. The Journal is always brimming with cool ideas.

lead to a battleship running into a just couple of destroyers if you're unlucky, but a lot depends on how you choose to split up your fleet. Besides, the destroyers would easily outrun the battleship as long as they got out of range of its weapons quick enough...

After this initial deployment, each player randomly chooses another of the contact markers, which represent their remaining divisions, at the end of each turn. The contact marker is placed on a randomly selected table edge to indicate the imminent arrival of that division as it speeds to the assistance of those already fighting (well, hopefully anyway). At the start of their turn a player gets to roll a dice for any of their contact markers already on the table edge, and if they score high enough the ships in that division arrive (in the nick of time).

The twist in the tale is that if there are friendly ships close to a contact marker when it makes its arrival roll, it gets a healthy bonus on the dice roll, to represent them receiving accurate coordinates and communications from the ships engaged. If the arrival roll is failed, the contact marker can slide along the table edge to represent the division adjusting their course to arrive at a slightly different point on the battlefield, since they're obviously further away than anticipated.

For those of you with a historical bent, this particular scenario is based on the Battle of Jutland (or Skaggerak as the Germans called it) in WWI. If you like a challenge, the Battle of Jutland would make a great Battlefleet Gothic game to re-enact, although the dozens of capital ships involved would make it a long fight!

THE PLAYERS

Gav and I have been protagonists throughout the playtesting and writing of Battlefleet Gothic. I've mostly commanded the Imperial fleet while Gav has been Warmaster of the vile forces of Chaos. For this battle it seemed only natural to reprise our roles, especially as Gav has a number of good drubbings to avenge. Dave Andrews and Tim Adcock have designed the miniatures for Gothic, and also played several games while we were writing it. They asked for another game shortly before we were due to fight the battle report, so we callously roped them in. Tim designed the Chaos ships so he went on Gav's side, and Dave designed the Imperial ships so he came on my side. And despite whatever you might hear, it simply isn't true that we invited them along so we could blame them if we lost!

THE TERRAIN

The celestial phenomena (that's what we call terrain in Battlefleet Gothic) are rolled up randomly, using the table in the main rules. This gave us a battle in the outer reaches of the star system where it's cold, dark and there are plenty of dust clouds and asteroid fields. The main features proved to be a large asteroid field with a smaller one nearby, some scattered dust clouds and a medium sized planet with a single moon.

The celestial phenomena have the following effects;

Asteroid fields block firing and torpedoes and are dangerous to move through.

Dust clouds reduce the effectiveness of firing through them and slow down movement.

The planet and moon also block firing but may be moved 'through' (ie over or under). They also project a gravity well a short distance around them which ships can use to turn, using a slingshot orbit to swing tightly around the planet. As is often the case, clever use of the gravity wells was to prove highly significant in this battle.
CHAOTIC DECISIONS

Gav: During the development of Battlefleet Gothic, I concentrated on helping Andy with the Chaos ships and fleet list while he devoted his attention to the Imperial forces of Gothic Sector. So it was that I was given command of the Chaos fleet for this first Gothic battle report, ably aided by Tim, who designed the Chaos ships (and what a splendid job he's done too).

When it came to choosing the Chaos fleet, I drew on the large number of games I've already played to inform my choices. There are two advantages that most Chaos ships have over their Imperial enemies: range and speed. This extra range and faster movement means that a Chaos fleet does well if it can use its extra speed to keep the enemy at a distance, utilizing its long range guns to good effect while the enemy cannot return fire. Unfortunately, this is far, far easier said than done — especially against Imperial ships which have a thick front armor and can charge straight for you without risking too much.

To start with, my fleet needed a Warmaster to lead it. High Leadership values are vital in Battlefleet Gothic and I decided not to skimp on getting a good fleet commander. Fleet commanders also have re-rolls, which are very useful when that all-important command check to reload your torpedoes or try to lock on to the enemy fails. A Warmaster can be given an extra re-roll with the Mark of Tzeentch, a real snip at 30 points. As Tim was also going to be playing, it seemed churlish that he didn't have anyone to represent him in the fleet. Luckily, Chaos fleets can include Lords as well as Warmasters, and I paid out the points for Gethra Sadivist, a Lord with the Mark of Slannesh, which would give Imperial ships nearby a reduction to their Leadership.

After deducting the points for these from my total, I still had plenty left to spend. My next stop in the fleet list was the Cruisers section. If you want to include any heavy cruisers in a Chaos fleet you have to have at least two normal cruisers, and for that lovely battleship you need three cruisers or heavy cruisers. I was beginning to see a plan. A battleship, two cruisers and a heavy cruiser would be my capital ships, with the rest of the points spent on whatever small escorts I could afford.

In my opinion, a Chaos fleet isn't right without at least one Murder class cruiser. With its solid gun decks, the Murder class can outrange most Imperial ships, and even give them a nasty broadside duel at close range. My other favorite cruiser class is the Slaughter. Faster even than Imperial frigates, the Slaughter is strange for a Chaos ship because its weapon batteries only have a 30m range. However, what batteries they are! Combining fire with its prow weapons, a Slaughter class can bring more firepower to bear than a Retribution class battleship (although at half the range) and still has two lance shots. on top of that. While the rest of your fleet tries to keep its distance, a Slaughter class can race into the middle of the enemy fleet and just pound away, crippling enemy cruisers with just one or two salvoes.

The next thing to consider was attack craft – tiny, little things (compared to the main ships) like fighters, bombers and assault boats. Attack craft will rarely win you a battle outright, but the side with air superiority (or should that be vacuum superiority?) has a distinct edge. Fighters are particularly useful for a Chaos fleet as they can intercept all those torpedoes an Imperial fleet can throw at you. The choice was simple: either a Styx class heavy cruiser or a Despoiler class battleship, either of which can launch a considerable number of attack craft. In the end I decided to go for the Styx for the simple reason that this meant my battleship could be a Desolator class with its massive broadside batteries of long range lances – the perfect support ship for a Chaos fleet.

The final task was to use up the points with raiders and/ or destroyers. In the end I went for seven Infidel raiders in squadrons of three and four vessels, and a three- strong squadron of Idolators. The Infidels are useful because they are among the few Chaos vessels to be armed with torpedo tubes. They have made themselves a considerable annoyance to Andy in the past and hopefully would do the same in this battle.

For the Escalating Engagement scenario, the fleet must be divided into five divisions, which arrive randomly throughout the battle. Selecting our divisions wasn’t too difficult. I know from experience that battleships must have a squadron of escorts around to cover their rear from enemy vessels, and the Horrific (the Styx class heavy cruiser) would also benefit from this kind of arrangement. This meant the fleet easily broke down into a battleship plus escorts, heavy cruiser plus escorts, two cruisers and an escort squadron. With the fleet selected and put into divisions, we started setting up. We decided to use the sub-plot rules from Battlefleet Gothic as these can add an extra twist to any scenario, no matter how many times you’ve played it before. The Imperial players generated Secret Intelligence and decided to place their spy aboard the Horrific, while we had a Desperate Mission. In this sub-plot, a chosen capital ship has to survive the battle relatively intact. It was tempting to choose the battleship, Torment, but on reflection we decided that Andy and Dave would be trying all they could to destroy it anyway, so perhaps this wasn’t such a good idea. On the other hand, the Horrific would hopefully be keeping out of trouble, launching waves of fighters and bombers, and so stood a good chance of avoiding the worst attentions of the Imperial fleet. So it was the Horrific that had a desperate mission. With the two sub-plots together, it was obvious that the fate of the Horrific could make the difference between a heroic victory and a miserable defeat!
CHOOSING THE IMPERIAL FLEET

Andy: It's difficult to pick a fleet for an escalating engagement as it is almost inevitable that your ships will arrive in precisely the wrong order to support each other. Instead I chose what's a fairly standard Imperial fleet for me. I started with the Admiral, compulsory in any fleet worth more than 750 points and pretty dang useful anyway. The Admiral has a set Leadership value and gives the fleet he commands a number of re-rolls against failed command checks. For those of you who didn't catch the preview Gothic rules in White Dwarf 225 (where were you?), command checks are an important part of the game. If you want a ship to move faster, or lock on, or reload its torpedoes or attack craft it needs to pass a command check by rolling equal to or under its Leadership value. To cover the worst foul ups I invested in a reasonably good admiral with a Leadership of 9 and two re-rolls, expensive in terms of points but a good way of enhancing the whole fleet.

The first ship had to be a Retribution class battleship, the Cardinal Boras, supplying the big guns with its 60cm range weapons batteries and lances. Next I took the Imperious, a Mars class battlecruiser, to give me some launch bays so that I could use fighters to tend off Chaos attack craft and hopefully put in some bomber attacks myself. The Mars class also has long range lances and a nova cannon – an awesome guess range weapon capable of hitting targets up to 150cm away.

Ordinarily these two ships would give supporting fire from behind a battline of cruisers, so I went on to choose two Lunar class cruisers, the Retribution and the Iron Duke, to stand up front and engage the enemy. Lunar class cruisers are good all-round ships with a shortish range of 30cm, so they could be relied on to give a good account of themselves as long as they were not caught in a gun battle with a longer ranged foe (if this did happen they could withdraw under the cover of the longer ranged guns on Imperious and Cardinal Boras).

Huge, lumbering ships with lots of guns are very nice but they're, well, lumbering and if a squadron of agile destroyers or frigates can get round behind them they won't be able to shake them off. The best defense against the piranha-like depredations of these kind of enemy ships is to have some light, escorting ships of your own. Sword class frigates are ideally suited to protecting larger ships, having a good combination of firepower and turrets to shoot down incoming torpedo salvos and attack craft. I selected a pair of these minnows to protect the whales and took a squadron of three Cobra class destroyers to run interference. Cobra's are as puny as a puny thing, but they are armed with torpedoes so they can break up an incoming enemy attack and then scuttle for cover while they reload.

I didn't choose too many escort ships because I wanted to try out a couple of Dauntless class light cruisers. Although expensive in points and poorly protected, light cruisers combine the maneuverability of an escort ship with the punch of a cruiser. I hoped these ships would be able to help protect my gunline and/or aggressively hunt down enemy escorts and cruisers.
ORGANIZING THE FLEET

For an escalating engagement, the fleet is split into five divisions which will arrive randomly throughout the battle. Before Captain Dave and I went on to deciding what to put in the divisions, we rolled for the Leadership ratings of our ships. Leadership for ships is normally generated randomly if a battle is not a campaign game (which this isn't). Leadership represents the competence and experience of the captain and crew, the state of their communications and so forth. In our case the random rolls produced the following (absolutely appalling) results:

- Cardinal Boras: Ld 6
- Imperious: Ld 6
- Iron Duke and Retribution: Ld 6 & 8
- Havock and Alarm: Ld 9 & 8
- Squadron Secondus: Ld 6
- Squadron Angelus: Ld 8

Squadron Secondus would simply have to hope they weren't called on to make command checks too often.

With our main ships now somewhat better led, we organized our divisions as follows:

Dave commanding:
- Cardinal Boras and Squadron Secondus
- Iron Duke

Andy commanding:
- Imperious and Havock
- Retribution
- Alarm and Angelus Squadron

SUBPLOTS

To add some extra spice to the game we decided to use the additional subplots in the Gothic rules. These introduce extra victory conditions, random events and other unforeseen circumstances rolled up at random. Our subplot turned out to be that there was an Imperial spy aboard one of the Chaos ships we were hunting for (brave man). His information and reports gave our Admiral an additional re-roll (hoorah) but we were under orders to extricate said spy by making a hit and run raid or boarding the Chaos ship at some point in the battle (hmm, easier said than done). Gav told us the names of the Chaos capital ships in the opposing fleet and we chose the Horrific as the one our spy was aboard.
EXTRACT FROM SECOND LIEUTENANT RUSSEL’S LOG, THE MOST BENEFICENT EMPEROR’S MARS CLASS BATTLECRUISER IMPERIOUS.

Thirteenth day of Heracles

17:05 Ship Standard Time. Still on station orbiting Calydon, Havock in attendance. Captain Bast has transferred aboard Havock for dinner with Commander Leight. Reports from scouting patrol have notified us that enemy battleship Torment has been prowling this area. Admiral Andreius aboard Cardinal Boras en route to our position, but we must be vigilant.

17:37SST. Officer of Surveyors reports anomalous energy spike beyond orbital asteroid field. Have notified Captain Bast, who will be returning shortly.

17:42SST. Red Alert! Energy spike is definite engine signature. Filtering now. Identified as Monstrous, renegade Murder class cruiser. All hands at gun positions. Nova cannon power relays are active.

17:43SST. Our foe realized he had been detected and attempted to burn retros and remain out of sight. Attempt was unsuccessful and Monstrous has drifted into targeting range. Captain Bast is shuttling back. We have detected a second energy reading, approaching from the other side of Calydon’s moon from decadrant 006. Captain has given comm-order to fire nova cannon. We are remaining in orbit, as is Havock. Nova cannon firing – detonation short of target, we lack the Captain’s keen eye! Signal for reinforcements sent. Answering call from the Cardinal Boras. Is incoming with Squadron Secondus in attendance.
17:49SST. Monstrous has altered course towards Calydon but not yet able to fire on us. Another energy contact appeared on surveyors, moving in from beyond Monstrous. Captain Bast back aboard. Breaking orbit with Havock in attendance. Closing range with target. Nova cannon firing. Target well hit! Surveyors indicate all shields overloaded. Target badly damaged. Captain Bast well pleased. Dorsal lance turrets, thirty second salvo. Target well hit! Monstrous on fire from starboard galleries to aft engine decks. More Imperial forces responding to message.

17:54SST. Monstrous continuing on course. Surveyors indicate energy outlay directed towards repair. Fire still burning on target. Nova cannon firing. Target well hit! Energy readings of Monstrous at minimal. Target is a hulk, continuing to drift. Explosion has extinguished fire. Multiple enemy signals closing fast from decadrant 001. Cardinal Boras reaches battlezone, will establish orbit around Calydon's satellite. Squadron Secundus is directing weapons to the rear of Cardinal Boras. Enemy signals right behind the Cardinals Boras, imminent arrival. Course laid in to recover hulk of Monstrous.

Hitting with the nova cannon
Nova cannons are unusual weapons in that no roll to hit is made for them. Instead the firer has to guess the range to the target ship, and then a template is placed with its outer edge at the range guessed. If the hole in the centre of the template is over the target ship's base, a direct hit is scored and the target suffers D6 automatic hits(!). If a ship's base is covered by the outer edge of the template, it suffers one automatic hit. As you can imagine, good guesswork can make a nova cannon deadly, whereas poor guesswork will make it useless. Here are some top tips on getting the best out of nova cannon:

1. Choose an easy target - a battleship or a squadron of enemy vessels is a lot easier to hit than one small ship on its own.

2. Don't think about it too hard, your first 'gut feeling' about how far away the target lies is probably pretty accurate.

3. Add about 2-3cm onto your 'gut feeling' estimate. Remember the range is measured to the outer edge of the template and you need the centre of it to be over the target for maximum effect. Boom!
18:02SST. Energy signal beyond gas clouds on course from quadrant 003, approaching rapidly. Have visual confirmation now. Slaughter class cruiser at full speed. Positive identification, continuous transmission from enemy vessel – “Killfrenzy Killfrenzy Killfrenzy…” Admiral Andreius has ordered us and Havock to link with Imperial vessels approaching from starboard. Cardinal Boras continuing on course to achieve moon orbit. New enemy signal to starboard, approaching Calydon directly.

HINTS AND TIPS

Anticipation

One of the hardest things to get your head round when commanding a fleet of ships rather than a 40K or Warhammer army is the fact that everything keeps moving, whether you want it to or not! What this means is, that by maneuvering yourself into what seems to be a good firing position for one turn, you may find that in future turns your ships become scattered and vulnerable to attack. Here’s some top tips on how to plan your moves.

Don’t just look at where your ships will be after their next move, anticipate where they will be after several turns and think about whether that’s where you really want them to be.

Try to bring your ships together so that they are moving in more or less the same direction. This will stop them being picked off one at a time because they are split off.

Keep escort ships back until you know where the main fight is taking place. If escorts are committed to combat too early they can be destroyed ahead of your main fleet. Their greater speed and maneuverability is more useful for covering gaps in your fleet than taking off and attacking things on their own.
18:13SST. Latest enemy signal identified as Styx class heavy cruiser and squadron of Infidel raiders. Infidels bear the markings of Feliclaw pirates. Heavy cruiser identified as Horrific. Admiral Andreius informs us that an Imperial agent is aboard the Horrific. All ships must endeavor to recover our ally. Horrific launching bombers. Two waves, six squadrons in total. Feliclaws engaging Havock, torpedoes are launched. Torpedoes score two major hits on Havock. Enemy signal approaching beyond Killfrenzy.

18:14SST. Signal following Cardinal Boras within scanning range. Hell's teeth, it's the Torment! Torment and squadron of Idolator escorts bearing down on flagship, all power to weapons. They've locked on to the battleship. Enemy firing. Horrific, twenty second lance salvo at Cardinal Boras, stripping flagship's shields. Idolators firing, weapons batteries at close range, forty five second lance salvo. The Cardinal's shields are down. Structural damage along engine housings and aft decks. Torment opening fire on Cardinal Boras, dorsal weapons and sixty second lance salvo. Cardinal Boras hit severely, surface damage to port galleries and prow. Still fully operational. Torment launching torpedoes at full spread. Squadron Secundus frigates bracing for impact. Massive detonations among Squadron Secundus. No damage inflicted! The Emperor was watching over them! Idolators identified as Expuglators.
18:15ST. Imperial arrivals – Retribution, Alarm and Squadron Angelus incoming from decadrant 004. We are moving through enemy torpedoes. Turrets shoot down one torpedo, no impacts. Horrific directing power to defensive systems – they’re bracing for Imperial attack. Fellclaws making evasive maneuvers, bracing for attack. Retribution fires on Fellclaws, shield of lead vessel depleted.

18:16ST. Nova cannon firing at Horrific. Target well hit! Target’s shields overloaded. Alarm targeting Horrific. Damage to enemy’s superstructure, severe damage to starboard launch bays, enemy engine failure reported by Officer of Surveyors. Alarm reports attempted teleport attack on Horrific unsuccessful.

Andy checks whether the Imperious and Havock are within Calydon’s gravity well.
Control the battlefield

The effects of celestial phenomena can be decisive in a battle. Asteroid fields, planets and dust clouds can protect your ships from enemy fire or block a route of advance. The gravity wells of planets or moons can be used to maneuver your ships into position much faster than they could manage otherwise. This makes it important to control the battlefield and make the celestial phenomena work for you instead of against you. In this battle the Imperial fleet used the planet and moon to help move their fleet together and protect them from the Torment’s firing until they were ready to attack.

18:17SST. Cardinal Boras returns fire on Torment. Firing reduced due to battleship’s braced status. Three quarters of Torment’s shields knocked down. Squadron Secundus opens fire on Expuglators, shield knocked down, no damage. We are launching fighters to intercept enemy bombers. We pray they arrive in time. Horrific directing power to repair systems, no major repairs detected.

18:21SST. Torment launching torpedoes. The Admiral looks in trouble. Emperor’s blessings! Torment’s torpedoes prematurely detonated in debris and radiation cloud!

18:22SST. Officer of Surveyors reports Horrific’s engines fully operational. Extensive repairs to Horrific’s launch bays – probably fully operational.

18:35SST. Torment turrets opening fire on torpedo salvo from Alarm. No hits registered against Torment.

Imperious launches Starhawk bombers against the Feliclaw.
Brace For Impact

Brace For Impact is a special order which ships can use if they pass a command check when they come under fire. Brace For Impact gives the ship a 4+ saving throw against any damage sustained by the ship but reduces the effectiveness of its firing on its next turn (more energy has been put into protection and the crew are concentrating on damage control duties). Brace For Impact can make a ship very hard to cripple or destroy, as was the case with the Cardinal Boras. Deciding when to brace is tricky though, because it puts the ship or squadron on the defensive and makes it less effective next turn. If too many of your ships end up bracing for impact, your enemy effectively has you on the run and you'll lose the ability to fight back effectively. On the other hand it's better to brace a ship for one turn than have it crippled or destroyed for the rest of the battle.

HINTS AND TIPS

enemy caught in blast and shields overloaded. Lances and batteries targeting Horrific. Enemy shields overloaded. Structural damage inflicted.

18:42SST. Cardinal Boras targeting thirty second lance salvo at Expulgrators. Targets not hit.

18:44SST. Battleship broadsides against Torment. Target partially hit, one shield bank depleted.

18:47SST. Alarm fires thirty second lance salvo at Torment. More enemy shield loss. We are deploying our Starhawk bomber squadrons against the Felliclaws. One target destroyed. Awaiting losses report from Master of Ordnance.

18:51SST. Horrific and Damnator taking up position together. Horrific launching fighters, targeting our bombers. Killfrenzy moving around asteroid field, closing with Torment. Havock lost shields to fire from Felliclaws, enemy lance salvo missed. We are under fire from batteries of Horrific. No serious hits reported, shields fully intact.
Supporting fire

Ships in Battlefleet Gothic are heavily armed, but they’re heavily protected too. It’s a good rule of thumb to assume that you will need the concentrated fire of two ships to damage one of similar size. So two cruisers should be able to cripple an enemy cruiser over a couple of rounds of firing, whereas one cruiser would probably only knock its shields down and cause no damage. Even with the help of a squadron of Idolators, the Chaos battleship Torment was unable to cripple the Cardinal Boras before Imperial reinforcements arrived and was itself destroyed by the massed firing of several Imperial ships. If you can concentrate your firing in this way you’ll find it much easier to take down opposing ships. Likewise, once an enemy ship has its shields knocked down, hit it with everything you’ve got!

18:53SST. Squadron Angelus under bombardment from Torment, no damage sustained. Torment firing lances at Retribution. Retribution hit, shields absorbed fire, no structural damage sustained. Iron Duke within identification range, right behind the Killfrenzy. Iron Duke’s firing reduces enemy’s shields, launching torpedo salvo towards Torment. We are launching more bombers. Nova cannon firing. Torment well hit, shields overloaded to maximum, no permanent damage registered. Torment is directing power to internal systems; they’re bracing for impact.

18:55SST. Retribution fires rolling broadsides against Torment. Target hit. Retribution’s lances have scored severe hits on Torment. The enemy’s bridge is destroyed! Torment is severely damage from prow to stern now. Cardinal Boras targeting Torment. Expuglators have interposed themselves between battleships, taking fire from Cardinal Boras. Escorts annihilated by massed broadsides and lance salvoes from Cardinal Boras.
The Imperial fleet forms its battleline and bombards the Chaos fleet, causing the destruction of Torment, Horrific, two of the Damnators and crippling Killfrenzy.

19:01SST. Our lance batteries have damaged Torment. Gun decks firing on Feliclaws. Shield on lead ship knocked down. Squadron Angelus has depleted shield on Horrific.

19:02SST. Cardinal Boras launching full torpedo salvo at Torment. Torpedoes not detonated by debris impeding line of fire. Retribution torpedoes explode within radiation cloud, no damage inflicted. We are launching four more bomber squadrons.

19:06SST. Killfrenzy moving at speed towards Cardinal Boras. Turning for full broadside against Alarm and Iron Duke. Enemy firing totally ineffective, no targets within range!

19:07SST. Horrific stationary within Calydon's gravity well. Havock's shields knocked down by Feliclaws. Cobra of Squadron Angelus destroyed by fire from Horrific. Retribution lost shields to fire from Damnators. Torment targeting shieldless Retribution. Damage sustained by Retribution. Damnators launching full torpedo spread against Retribution. Retribution is braced for impact, minimal damage sustained.

19:10SST. Torpedoes from Iron Duke fail to damage Torment.

19:12SST. Damnators hit by Iron Duke's torpedoes. One vessel destroyed. Horrific's turrets shoot down one of our bomber waves. Other bombers have destroyed Infidel in Feliclaws squadron.

19:15SST. Cardinal Boras staying on course, has locked on to the enemy. Nova cannon firing at Torment. Target well hit! Target has no shields. Iron Duke closing for the kill on Torment. Iron Duke's fire causing damage. All weapons on Cardinal Boras targeting Torment. Full broadsides and lance salvos, continuous fusillade. Torment severely hit. Torment is blazing from stem to stern. Torment destroyed! Praise the Emperor!

19:18SST. Alarm targeting Horrific with forward lances. Target destroyed! Horrific is drifting hulk, will recover later. Havock firing torpedoes at Killfrenzy.

19:21SST. Killfrenzy hit by torpedo salvo from Havock. Severe damage. Master Gunner reports Killfrenzy's bridge destroyed! Killfrenzy has been crippled with one salvo!

19:22SST. Traitor vessels breaking off combat. Admiral Andrielus has ordered us to recover hulks. Dauntless light cruisers and escorts will pursue the enemy. Victory for the Imperium! Death to the renegades!
CHAOS CONCLUSIONS

Gav: Dagnabbit! It was all looking so good at one point, and now what are we left with? The hulks of a battleship, heavy cruiser and cruiser, a crippled cruiser and a small handful of escorts. Abaddon will not be pleased with our performance. So, what went wrong?

There were several reasons for the Chaos fleet's unseemly demise. Firstly, Tim and I failed to organize our ships properly once they were on the tabletop. The Imperial fleet (helped by two of their divisions turning up next to each other and brought on to the table next to a third) actually began to resemble a fleet organized for battle, rather than a scattering of ships and squadrons dotted all over the place. As it was, once the Imperial ships were lined up and ready to go, there was not much Tim or I could do to match their combined effectiveness.

Secondly, the Torment didn't end up in the best position. Although it was nice to pound the Cardinal Boras for a turn or two, this was only ever going to be a short term gain. In such close confines, the Retribution class battleship's massed guns are more effective than the few lance shots on the Chaos battleship. Ships like the Torment are better at maximum range, preferably firing through dust clouds and blast markers. In these situations, the lances are just as effective as they are when right next to the enemy, while the enemy's firepower will be seriously reduced, so that even a lumbering battleship like the Cardinal Boras will only be rolling two or three dice to hit. As it was, even with the help of the Expurgators, the Torment just couldn't do enough damage to cripple the Cardinal Boras. If we had managed this, things might have been very different at the end...

Thirdly, we had some really sore luck at times. Take, for example, the Torment's initial torpedo salvo against the Sword class frigates of Squadron Secundus. A Strength 9 torpedo salvo that should hit all of them with some reasonable luck. Did any of them hit? Of course not! And again later, with the Torment's torpedo salvo blowing up on the blast markers. Curses.

And lets talk about nova cannons shall we? Andy has had a lot of practice with the old range-guessing, it must be said, but to miss only two out of nine shots is pretty superhuman. No wonder Captain Compel Bast gained such a reputation during playtesting.

So all in all we lost because we didn't have a proper plan, while Andy and Dave did. This was compounded by some bad luck on our part (although the bad luck wasn't all one way, I have to say) and some very effective shooting by the Imperious. Well, no matter. We'll be back, you can be sure of it!

IMPERIAL CONCLUSIONS

Andy: The last few turns made it all look like a foregone conclusion, but for a long time the Imperial fleet was in grave danger of being outmanoeuvred and badly mauled by the numerous Chaos escort ships. One of the decisive moves for the Imperium was sending the Imperious and Havoc into range of the contact markers on the far side of the planet (choosing to ignore the chance of more nova cannon shots at the Killfrenzy to do so). This ensured the quick arrival of two extra divisions to assist the Cardinal Boras against the Torment. Also, the Cardinal Boras's use of the moon's gravity well to come about and get behind the Torment was essential to the survival of the Cardinal Boras and the destruction of the Torment. Finally, it must be said that the inspired shooting by the Imperious with its nova cannon inflicted immense harm on the Chaos fleet and paved the way to victory.

We're looking for a few good trollz

Here at the U.S. Mail Order we are constantly expanding (and we're not just talking about our bellies), and we always need more trolls to supply the ravenous demands of our 'oomie customers.

We pride ourselves on having the most knowledgeable and hard working staff in the company, and we have to because we receive hundreds of phone calls and orders in the mail every day from all over the country. Our job is to help dedicated gamers and parents with all orders and gaming inquires.

In order to maintain our 2 day turnaround of all orders we are looking to fill a few positions, but don't be fooled by our fun Troll references. The successful applicants will have to be hard working with a high standard of professionalism, be prepared to put in extra hours as required, fit into an established team, and most importantly of all, consider customer service their greatest priority.

If you have what it takes to join the greatest Mail Order team in the world, send your application to:

Bob Bassin, Games Workshop
6721 Baymeadow Drive,
Glen Burnie, Maryland 21060-6401

AT PRESENT WE ARE LOOKING TO RECRUIT:

Phone Trollz
To be a successful phone troll you need extensive figure and gaming knowledge, as you will receive 100+ calls a day on any Games Workshop subject you care to mention. Day-to-day duties include answering the phone, taking customers' orders, and solving customers' problems.
ADVANCE ORDER

Did you know... that you can place an Advance Order for all new games and miniatures, then have them delivered to your door by First Class post, sent on the day of release!

The new Imperial Cruiser plastic sprue is a multi-part kit with interchangeable weapon bays, with which you can assemble not one, but seven different classes of Imperial Cruiser, as shown below.

IMPERIAL CRUISERS
Designed by Dave Andrews

There are two multi-part cruiser kits within the Imperial Cruiser boxed set, each of which can be made into one of seven different classes of cruiser. The cruisers shown here have been assembled as a Lunar class cruiser, a versatile ship which forms the mainstay of Battlefleet Obscurus, and a Mars class battlecruiser, which can launch attack craft from its vast flight bays and carries the powerful, prow-mounted nova cannons. Other Imperial designs include the Overlord class battlecruiser, which is armed with long ranged weapons batteries, and the Dictator class cruiser – an attack craft carrier.

WHITE DWARF

In case you didn’t know, White Dwarf is the monthly magazine dedicated to the latest news, rules updates, modeling and painting advice, and releases from Games Workshop. The regular Chapter Approved section provides new rules, army lists, and Q+A’s for Warhammer 40,000. Regiments of Renown introduces mercenary units for Warhammer. These exclusive features let you take your games beyond the boxes they come in. But there’s a whole lot more! The ‘Eavy Metal crew gives you some of the best painting and modeling advice you’ll find anywhere, right alongside full-color pictures of the newest Citadel Miniatures painted to the highest standards of excellence. All this, plus inside information on upcoming Games Workshop projects, make White Dwarf a must-read each and every month for anyone involved in the Games Workshop world of hobby gaming!
